MR. MURRAY'S NEW BOOKS

THE DIARY OF A GIRL IN FRANCE IN 1821. Written by MARY BROWNE. Illustrated by HERSELF. With an Introduction by EUPHEMIA STEWART BROWNE. Edited by Commander the Hon. H. N. SHORE, R.E. Square demy 8vo. 9*s*. net.

The diary, though full of prejudice, is quite free from school-girl silliness It describes everyday people and things with much point and originality, and gives one a very pleasant idea of the writer, but probably its main entertainment lies in the lifelike picture of the sufferings of a north country family in foreign parts. The last recorded words of the family on leaving France were, 'William,' in answer to a polite commissaire. 'Je déteste la France,' and to which another brother adds, 'Je déteste les Français aussi.'

THE CONFESSIONS OF LORD BYRON: a Collection of his Private Opinions of Men and Manners, taken from the New and Enlarged Edition of his Letters and Journals. Arranged by W. A. LEWIS BETTANY, Editor of 'Johnson's Table-Talk.' With Two Portraits in Photogravure. Square demy 8vo. 10*s*. 6*d*. net.

BOOKS OF THE MONTH.
A Classified Catalogue of the Noteworthy Books, New Editions, and Reprints of June.

It is probable that libraries which have not subscribed to the BOOK MONTHLY from its commencement would desire to begin now, if they could get the back numbers. These are important when a publication has proved itself valuable for reference, as well as for its general contents. To meet such cases—which, indeed, may not be confined to libraries—a certain number of sets of the magazine have been kept complete, since the first issue, October 1903. Communications with reference to them should be addressed to the Editor, the BOOK MONTHLY, 14 Tavistock Street, London, W.C.

The Publishers of the BOOK MONTHLY are Simpkin, Marshall, Hamilton, Kent & Co., Stationers' Hall Court, London, it price 6d. net.

CONFESSIONS (?) OF A PUBLISHER.*

A NOTE by the publishers, Messrs. Doubleday, Page & Co., of New York, informs us that this is 'a very practical, as well as interesting, volume for those engaged in the various branches of authorship, book-making, and book-selling—as well as everyone who cares for books.' It is a reprint of articles which originally appeared in the Boston Transcript, and attracted a good deal of attention.

It is not easy to discover why this book is called 'A Publisher's Confession'; there is nothing in it which has not been common knowledge 'all the time,' as our American friends say. It is not a new thing to put a sensational title to an unsensational book, but this publisher would not condescend to such 'little artificial tricks of the trade,' as he calls them—he leaves them to 'Podunk, Exploitem & Co.' If this book had been called 'A Publisher on Publishing' no publisher would have touched it; but 'Confession'—that is why it is so disappointing. Authors and authors' societies have for so long been roundly declaring, or deviously insinuating, what a wicked lot the publishers are, that it was natural to expect a delightful exposure of jobbery and robbery by a converted villain. But this publisher might be an angel from the way he writes.

One chapter is devoted to showing that the policy of giving large royalties is a ruinous one—no new arguments here, but much good common-sense. Formerly—in America, at any rate—it was the rule to pay authors a 10 per cent. royalty. 'The rise of royalties paid to popular authors is the most important recent fact in the publishing world. It has not been many years since 10 per cent. was the almost universal rule; and a 10 per cent. royalty on a book that sells only reasonably well is a fair bargain between publisher and author. . . . The present fashion of a part of the writing world—to squeeze the last cent out of a book, and to treat the publisher as a mere manufacturer and "boomer"—cannot last. Only the Keeper of dark secrets knows how many publishers have lost, or how large their losses have been, on "boomed" books.' In the same chapter we are told that 'there is not a publisher in the United States who is to day making any large sum of money on his "general trade." Money is made on educational books, on subscription books, on magazines. But publishing, as publishing, is the least profitable of all the professions, except preaching and teaching, to each of which it is a sort of cousin.' No confessions in this chapter, but much good argument, from the publisher's point of view, to prove that authors would get more money if they did not ask for such big royalties.

Chapter II. is entitled 'Why "Bad" Novels Succeed and "Good" Ones Fail.' The nearest thing to a confession in it is that 'the publisher's loss on an unsuccessful novel may be little or big'—which on the face of it seems to be fairly obvious. 'The chief reason for the success of a novel is the commonplace one that it contains a story. A novel may be ever so well written, if it have no story the public will not care for it. I wonder if there be any light in this very obvious discovery? Simple as it seems, it costs every publishing house a pretty penny every year to find it out; and as soon as we find it out about one writer we forget it about another! It is a great truth that does not remain discovered.'

In the next chapter the 'tradition' that authors are 'an irritable tribe' is easily proved to be false—at least, it is 'usually the unsuccessful who are irritable, whether they be authors or not.' 'Has publishing become commercialised?' In some fifteen pages this question is discussed. Although 'authorship and publishing—the whole business of producing contemporaneous literature—has for the moment a decided commercial squint,' the conclusion come to is that 'the publishing houses in the United States that are conducted as dignified institutions are conducted with as little degrading commercialism as the old houses whose history has become a part of English literature, and I believe they are conducted with more ability.' If this is a confession, it is one which need not be accepted as entirely impartial.

'Has the unknown author a chance?' is surely a curious question for a publisher to ask, since every author who is not otherwise a celebrity begins by being unknown. In this chapter we again look vainly for anything in the nature of a confession—beyond the confession which is made every day by every publisher that if a book hits the public taste it will sell, and if it does not it will not, and that it is impossible to say beforehand whether it will be a hit or a miss. 'To sell a novel that has the mysterious quality of popularity in it is not difficult. Properly launched, it sells itself. To sell a novel that lacks the inherent quality of popularity—that is almost impossible. Nobody has discovered a rule—to say nothing of a principle—whereby the popularity of a novel by a new writer may be determined.' It really is difficult to understand for whose benefit this eminent anonymous American publisher prints such information as this; is there anyone 'who cares for books' who can be ignorant of it? Far more useful is the advice to publishers to be civil to authors—even to unknown authors in rejecting their manuscripts. 'Every letter of declination ought to be written by a skilful man—a diplomatist who can write an unpleasant truth without offence. Every such letter ought to be written with a pen. No general form ought to be used. Yet in only one of the publishing houses whose habits I know is this degree of care taken.'

In Chapter VI. we at last come upon a confession, but not of our publisher's sins, or indeed of any publisher's sins. It is about 'A Heartless Pirate Who Preys Upon the Unsophisticated and Ambitious Writer'—this sounds like the heading of a chapter from 'Bluebeard.' It is amusing to find the Heartless Pirate is not really a publisher, he is 'a Printer who Pretended to be a Publisher,' who induces unprotected females to publish at their own expense books of which he does not expect to sell any copies. It really is a touching story, the story of 'the man—oftener it is a woman—who conceives the notion of writing a novel. She works alone. She shuts herself off from life about her. . . . She goes on working by herself, with no corrective companionship. At last she sends it to a real publisher and gets a disappointing,' and, as we have been told previously, a '"perfunctory" decision.' Thus is she driven into the hands of the Heartless Pirate, who charges her more than one thousand dollars—1,150 to be exact—of which 700 is his profit. 'That is the end of the book, and in most cases the end of the author's career—the work begun in loneliness has ended in oblivion—wasted days, wasted dollars, wasted hopes.' It is all true—but is it new? The only consolation is that the Heartless Pirate is not a publisher, he is a 'Pseudo Publisher,' a 'Fake-Publisher' or a—'Printer'—truly, confession is good for the soul, especially when it is other people's sins you are confessing. The Moral at the end of this chapter is

* A Publisher's Confession. (New York: Doubleday, Page & Co.) Price 20 cents.

Select your publisher with care
(See he punches in the presence of the passenjare),
Make sure that he is honest (by far most of us are);
Then Trust Him. But steer clear of all 'fake' publishers and 'agents.'

In Chapter VII. we seem to be getting warm in the hunt for a really interesting confession, but what this publisher confesses on one page he retracts on another. In writing about the advertising of books, of which he asserts 'nobody knows anything,' he says: 'The old-fashioned way was to insert a brief, simple, dignified announcement of every book, as is still done in the Spectator, of London, for example. Good; but such an announcement doesn't go far. A very few thousand persons see it. They wait until the books are reviewed, or till some friend or authority speaks about them. For this perfectly good reason some publishers do not insert many advertisements in those publications that go only to the literary class—they are to a degree superfluous. Those that are inserted are inserted to give the publishers and the books a certain "standing," and to keep pleasant relations between the publishers and these journals.' This is, so far, the most interesting confession we have come across. Good honest publishers advertise in the literary journals not because it is any good, but to keep them friendly. But why keep them friendly if their friendship is of no value? For has not this publisher in a previous chapter confessed that 'I, for one—and I know no publisher who holds a different opinion—care nothing for the judgment of the professional literary class. Their judgment of a novel, for instance, is of little value or instruction. It may be right—often it is. It may be wrong. But, whether right or wrong (and there is no way to determine finally whether any judgment be right or wrong), it is of no practical value. A literary judgment of a new novel cannot affect the judgment that men will form of it ten years hence. Therefore it is of no permanent value. Neither can it affect the sales of a new novel. It is therefore of no practical value for the moment.'

Could an absurdly untrue statement be more plainly stated than this? And the writer goes on to contradict himself by saying: 'I look upon reviews of novels as so much publicity—they have value, as they tell the public that the book is published and can be bought, and as they tell something about it which may prod the reader's curiosity. Further than this they are of no account.' After declaring that critical reviews are of no value now or in ten years hence, he says they are of value since they make the book known and interest people in them, and in another chapter he admits it pays to pay for advertisements in them, not because the advertisements are any good, but because they give kudos to the publisher and keep the reviewers friendly. If the opinions of the critics are of no value, present or future, why pay for them, and why pay for quoting them so universally as is done by all 'honest American publishers' in their advertisements?

We have given a good deal of space to this book, because it has received a great deal of notice, chiefly on account of its title, in the United States. We do not know who the 'publisher' is—in fact, we rather doubt if he is a publisher at all, and, judging from our knowledge of American publishers, extending over thirty years, we do not hesitate to say that we know none who would care to be identified with his 'confessions.' The trouble is, to use a favourite Americanism, that he is a bit too self-righteous. The author who dares to think there is any other honest publisher, after all he has done for him, and so takes his new book elsewhere, is evidently a 'pretty mean cuss, anyway.'

NOTES AND ANNOUNCEMENTS.

The Nineteenth Century and After trains at least six big guns on the attention of the British public in its July number. There are five articles relating directly or indirectly to the collapse of Russia and the new international relations—some of them extremely delicate ones—created by it; then the Duke of Argyll writes on National Defence; Sir William H. White on the Maintenance and Repair of our Fleet. In addition there are secondary batteries covering the Secret History of the Treaty of Berlin, the Sacred Trees of Rome, the Butler Report, a Country Parson of the Eighteenth Century, &c. The Nineteenth continues to be the most powerful review afloat on the literary and political waters of the world.

Messrs. Hodder & Stoughton announce the early publication of a new edition, carefully revised and in part rewritten, of Dr. J. Agar Beet's work on 'The Last Things,' which was withdrawn from circulation some six years ago in deference to serious opposition aroused in certain Wesleyan circles.

The picturesque attractions of the Lake District are unequalled in any other part of England, and in its circumscribed area, which nowhere exceeds fifty miles in length or breadth, is comprised a richer combination of sublimity and beauty of scenery than perhaps any other country can boast of. This compactness makes it ideal as the subject of a Colour Book, and Messrs. A. & C. Black are about to publish one on this district. Mr. A. Heaton Cooper, of Coniston, has painted the pictures, which are thoroughly representative. Mr. W. T. Palmer in the text of the volume devotes a chapter to each of the principal lakes. He does not, however, confine himself to descriptions of the scenery alone, but tells of the dalesmen—their work and their ways, their sports and pastimes—and legend and myth are freely introduced.

Abbotsford, created by Sir Walter Scott out of magic ink, is a Mecca which attracts pilgrims in increasing numbers every year. To them a Colour Book that Messrs. Black announce for publication this month will be specially welcome. It will also appeal to the far greater number who, although they know Abbotsford as a household word, can carcely hope to behold it with their own eyes. Mr. William Smith has done the drawings for the book, and the text is by the Rev. W. S. Crockett.

The latest addition to Messrs. George Bell & Sons' York Library is 'The Journey to Stella,' by Swift. It is edited by Frederick Ryland, M.A., and makes an attractive little book.

Arts and Crafts for July is an excellent number. The illustrated practical articles on 'Bookbinding' are continued, also reproductions of the bookbinding designs which won the Arts and Crafts competition. The magazine is admirably produced.

Messrs. Valentine & Sons Ltd., Dundee, published on June 27 the volume on 'Picturesque Ayrshire,' being the second of the 'Shire' series. The author is William Harvey, F.S.A.Scot., who is well known as an authority on Burns literature. The connection of the poet with his native county is fully traced and illustrated.

E. M. J., who wrote in the P.C. recently, is reminded by H. W. V. that Sir Leslie Stephen died on February 22, 1904, as recorded in the P.C. at the time.

The Gordon Bennett Race will be run this year on July 5 in the Auvergne Circuit, France. As enormous interest is centred in this, the greatest motor car race of the year, the Autocar will come out one day earlier than usual—that is to say, on July 6.

Mr. Heinemann will publish on July 14 a new novel entitled 'The Fool Errant' by Mr. Maurice Hewlett. The action of the story passes in Italy at the beginning of the eighteenth century, and unfolds various romantic adventures to which the hero, a candid and impulsive young Englishman, is urged by his chivalrous instincts.

Who invented creasing trousers? A writer in the Atlantic Monthly refers to it as an American institution; so it must be, judging from the pictures in the American magazines, in which all the men's trousers look like stove pipes which have been squashed flat and than opened out a bit. But did not the fashion first begin in London? Perhaps the Tailor and Cutter will tell us.

The Cornhill Magazine for July begins a new serial story by Mr. Quiller-Couch entitled 'Sir John Constantine,' the opening scenes of which are laid in England in the time of the elder Pitt.

The Frontispiece to Harper's Magazine for July (an excellent number) is a wonderful reproduction in colour of the picture of the murder of Henry VI. by Gloucester painted by E.A.Abbey, R.A. Henry, dying, clasps with one hand Gloucester's gartered leg, with the other the bloody end of the tyrant's sword: it gives one a creepy feeling. Never before did a sword seem so terrible a weapon.

Mr. Vardon's book, 'The Complete Golfer,' has been such a success that the first edition was completely exhausted within a few days of publication, and the second edition is now ready.

Mr. A. Siegle, of 2 Langham Place, London, publishes a neat little pamphlet entitled 'The Quintessence of the Shakespeare Secret,' by Edwin Borman, in which many of the well-known arguments of the Baconians are repeated. On page 20 Herr Borman makes a statement which is important, if true. He says that: 'Bacon says of "Henry the Fourth" that it was a matter which originally came from him, but which eventually passed under another's name." Will Herr B. give us chapter and verse for this? He believes that all the leading literary lights of Bacon's time knew he was the writer of the plays; if so, why did not a soul among them all give him the credit for them after his death, if they were afraid to during Bacon's lifetime? If Herr Borman can prove that Bacon claimed to have written the play known as Shakespeare's 'Henry the Fourth,' Baconian scrip will go up in the market.

A special photograph of the new Speaker is the frontispiece to the July number of the World's Work, which is also distinguished by a new departure for this magazine—the opening chapters of a practical romance called 'The Education of an Artist,' by Mr. C. Lewis Hind. A discussion of the cost of housekeeping in the country cottage includes budgets of expenses by ladies; and another feature of the number is an article on 'The Modern Profession of Inventing,' dealing chiefly with Edison's methods.

In the announcement of the new Civil List pensions we are glad to see that the daughters of the late Mr. J. D. Cooper are included; but we are not quite sure how the late eminent wood engraver would have liked being described as a 'wood carver.' Mr. Cooper loved a joke, even if it was against himself. On one occasion we remember criticising some block or other perhaps a little adversely. 'Ah!' said Mr. C., pushing his spectacles up on his forehead and scanning the work with a twinkle in his eye, 'you remind me of another publisher, who told me once that an artist was a man who made beautiful drawings on wood, and an engraver was a man who spoiled them.'

'Cymbeline' and 'Antony and Cleopatra' are the two volumes which have just appeared in the Little Quarto edition of Shakespeare. It may not be amiss to mention that a very neat little revolving book case is being prepared for this series, and that it will be ready very soon. The price will be quite moderate.

The Rhodesia Review, a new quarterly magazine for South African Shareholders and Settlers, will be issued on July 15. Questions of mining company reform and of profitably working Rhodesian gold will be dealt with, and there will be special articles on farming prospects for settlers, with particular reference to the commercial outlook for tobacco and cotton growing. The Rhodesia Review will be edited by Mr. Percy Lindley, and published at 30 Fleet Street, London, E.C.

'The business of Advertising' is the subject dealt with by Mr. Clarence Moran in his volume of the 'Books of Business' series published by Messrs. Methuen. The work covers all the important sections of this great subject, and there are a number of interesting illustrations.

A book that has been anxiously looked for during the past few years is now published by Messrs. Methuen—i. e. Vol. III. of Prof. W. M. Flinders Petrie's 'History of Egypt.' The work is now complete in six volumes. It is a work every Egyptologist must possess.

American women writers seem to be imitating some of ours in daring indecency. In reviewing a book by a Miss Margaret Potter, the New York Literary Digest says: 'After closing the book one feels like burning sticks of sulphur and putting out chloride of lime to clear the spiritual air.' Our contemporary thinks Miss Potter will live to be ashamed of it —not when she finds how it pays.

The issue of the School Manager for July 1 contains a special review of the New Education Codes, which this year are of a revolutionary character. Pity the sorrows of the producers of school books! No sooner do they conform to the fads of one lot of 'educationists,' than they find that they have to sink more money in order to meet the views of another lot.

A. Santos-Dumont, the celebrated aeronaut, has written an article on 'The Pleasures of Ballooning' for the July number of the Badminton Magazine of Sports and Pastimes. It has numerous illustrations of his airships over land and water.

'Verhandlungen des II. Internationalen Kongress für Allgemeine Religionsgeschichte in Basel 30 August bis 2 September, 1904,' containing essays by eminent theologians. Messrs. Williams & Norgate ask us to mention that this account of the congress has now been published.

Among the contributors to the first part, just issued, of the Review of Theology and Philosophy, edited by Professor Allan Menzies, of St. Andrews University, are Professor Lewis Campbell, Professor W. H. Bennett, Dr. J. Estlin Carpenter, Professor Vernon Barlett, Principal Lindsay, Dr. James Moffatt, Professor Bosanquet, Principal Stewart, Principal Iverach, Professor Jones, and the Editor. The new review is to be issued monthly, and the strong support accorded by the leading critics promises the magazine a useful career. Messrs. Otto Schulze & Co., of Edinburgh, are the publishers.

The issue of the Gardeners' Magazine for July 8 will be devoted entirely to the rose. Among its special and illustrated articles are the following: 'A Famous Rose Garden,' 'Lawn Groups of Roses,' 'Roses on Walls,' 'Rose Arches,' and 'New Rambling Roses.' Besides the numerous illustrations, a coloured plate of the new single rose 'Maharajah,' a lovely bit of colour-printing, is included. The price of the Rose Number will be 2*d.*

In the notice of the retirement of Mr. Holden from the Sunday School Union in the Publishers' Circular last week it was stated that the presentation to him by Mr. Melrose of the testimonial from the staff was made on January 19. It should have been June 19. Mr. Holden, as already mentioned, takes an important post in the service of Messrs. Raphael Tuck & Sons.

Messrs. Lupton Brothers, of Burnley, have published a very useful little pocket-book entitled 'Everybody's Guide to the Uniform List of Prices for Weaving, with Worked Examples.' It is by J. Holmes and F. Thomas, both experts in weaving. After looking over this little book we can easily understand that 'the system of calculating weaving prices from the "Uniform List" has long been held to be so difficult and intricate that to attempt to elucidate it on paper has led to failure on more than one occasion.' The object of this little guide is to explain the so-called unsurmountable difficulties, so that anyone with an elementary knowledge of decimals will have no difficulty in following the various processes of calculation which many cloths have to undergo before a net price can be obtained.

GUIDE BOOKS.

Herr K. E. Kochler, of Leipzig, publishes an illustrated catalogue of valuable Handbooks and Guides for Travellers in all parts of the world. It is a well got-up and most useful work of reference.

COPYRIGHT IN AUSTRALIA.

Publishers are more indebted than they are perhaps aware to the agents of the Publishers' Association in the Australian and other Colonies for the energy they show in dealing with cases of infringement of copyright. This frequently takes the form of the seizure of pirated reprints of copyright books consigned from America and elsewhere. In a recent case Mr. C. P. Clarke, the agent of the Publishers' Association in Sydney, was able to bring to book an infringement of a different character. Messrs. Longmans, Green & Co. complained to him through the Publishers' Association of an unauthorised publication in the Commonwealth School Paper of a poem by the late Mr. R. L. Stevenson, for which he promptly obtained redress. This paper is printed by authority of the State Education Department, and is issued to the Elementary Schools in New South Wales for use as a reader. A similar paper is issue by the Education Department of Victoria under the title of the School Paper in three parts monthly for Classes 3 to 6, and another by the Education Department of South Australia, called the Children's Hour. It would be in the interest of copyright owners in this country that they should carefully watch these papers to see that copyright matter is not inadvertently inserted. The circulation of the papers in the schools is very large. They can be ordered through the Australian booksellers, but otherwise cannot be obtained in this country.

NELSON CENTENARY POST CARDS.

In their excellent series of Art Post Cards, Messrs. Cassell & Co. have brought out a set of six coloured post cards to sell for 6*d.*, showing Nelson wounded at the Battle of the Nile and Nelson at the Battle of Copenhagen putting his telescope to his blind eye. [Some prosaic person has made out that this anecdote, like the 'Up, Guards, and at them' of Wellington, is 'all my eye,' as the sailors say. Such prosaic persons ought to be keel-hauled.] Then we have Nelson in his cabin, and coming on deck on the morning of Trafalgar; also the plucky men of the 'Redoutable' trying to board the 'Victory'; and, finally, the Death of Nelson. It is a well-produced and timely little memorial of some of the greatest days in British history.

DRAWINGS BY OLD DUTCH AND FLEMISH MASTERS.*

The first portfolio (Parts I.-IV.) of this fine and highly interesting publication containing plates I-L has just been completed.

The collection consists of drawings by famous artists as well as by masters who have hitherto remained unknown, often on account of the extreme scarcity of their work, and the plates represent the best and most characteristic productions of these artists.

THE PEACE OF THE ANGLO-SAXONS.

Lord Roberts contributes a Preface to an important book now being published by Messrs. Watts & Co. for Major Stewart L. Murray on 'The Peace of the Anglo-Saxons.' The work is devoted primarily to a consideration of how the peace of the country can best be preserved, and the author arrives at the conclusion that this can only be done for any length of time by the possession of such an armed force as will command peace. The question of invasion is also exhaustively discussed, and the conclusion is arrived at that, in order that the Navy may be strategically free for offensive purposes, a land force capable of adequately guarding this country during the absence of the Fleet is imperatively necessary. A strong appeal is made for the federation of the whole Anglo-Saxon race, including America. Earl Roberts, in his appreciative Preface, points out that the problems discussed in the work are of the gravest import, and he urges that, if Major Murray's facts cannot be gainsaid or his arguments refuted, the sooner we set about remedying existing defects and deficiencies the better.

The same publishers are also issuing two notable sixpenny reprints for the Rationalist Press Association—first, Samuel Laing's 'Problems of the Future,' a work which ran through fifteen editions in its more expensive form; and, secondly, Joseph McCabe's 'The Religion of Woman, an Historical Study, to which Lady Florence Dixie contributes an Introduction.

A PUBLIC LIBRARY FOR THE BLIND.

According to the New York Evening World, a public library for the blind has been opened in Brooklyn. It starts with 400 books, printed not with letters in ink to be read with the eye, but with the punctured characters for the trained and sensitive fingers of the blind. The library is located at Fourth Avenue and Pacific Street, and all blind visitors will be welcome. Although the books are not many in number, they take up a great deal of space. Books for the blind cannot be printed on thin paper, and the punctured characters must not be compressed, or they become blurred and more difficult to read. The Bible alone takes up three feet of shelf space.

The blind readers who have been consulted as to the kind of books they most want express a preference for light literature. They prefer books telling of sunshine and outdoor life, with vivid descriptions of the scenes and the things of which their loss of sight deprives them of first-hand knowledge. A library like this will bring more happiness than many great libraries for those who can read. The cost of preparing books especially for the blind is so great that the purchase of single copies by the blind is rare, and a library which gives them access to current literature will do much to bring into their lives some of the sunshine which they cannot see.

VIVISECTION OF AN AUTHOR.

In the Atlantic Monthly for April Mr. W. C. Brownell subjects the intellectual corpus of Mr. Henry James to such an able, interesting, and convincing process of vivisection as has not been equalled for many a year. As a piece of literary criticism it would be difficult to match it. In giving some extracts from it we do so with the hope that in justice to the writer and also to his subject they will send our readers to the article itself, which extends to over forty columns and covers the whole long period of Mr. James's literary activity.

Mr. Brownell writes at times as though he were an admirer—a great admirer—of the novelist. 'He is,' we are told, 'of course supremely skilful. He has a host of imitators, it is true; he has, in a way, founded a school, but as yet certainly this has produced no masterpieces. Has he himself? If so, they are, at all events, not unmistakably of the scale and on the plane suggested by his unmistakable powers—powers that make it impossible to measure him otherwise than by the standards of the really great novelists and of the masters of English prose.'

This quotation, from the last paragraph of the article, is a fair sample of its tone throughout. Mr. James's genius is set up on high one moment only to be dashed to earth with more effect the next; not that there is any bias or prejudice in the criticism—it is evidently intended to be a true estimate and valuation.

'Save for his parentheses, Mr. James holds his reader to the matter—or rather the absence of matter—in hand rather remorselessly. One would like more space, more air.

'His copiousness, too, is the result of his seriousness. If he eschews the foreign, he revels in the pertinent, and, pertinence being his sole standard of exclusion, he is bound to include much that is trivial. We have the paradox of an art product that is ineffective. It is as crowded with detail and as tight as a pre-Raphaelite picture, because there is no salutary sacrifices. It is not because he is a man, but because he is an artist, that nothing human is foreign to him. No rectitude was ever less partial or more passionless.'

Mr. James as a Realist.

'The most delicate, the most refined and elegant of contemporary romancers has thus become the most thorough-going realist of even current fiction. It is but a popular error to confound realism with grossness, and it is his complete exclusion of idealism and pre-occupation with the objective that I have in mind in speaking of his realism as so marked; though of recent years he has annexed the field of grossness also, cultivating it, of course, with particular circumspection—and thus rounded out his domain. It must be granted that his realism does not leave a very vivid impression of reality, on the one hand, and that, on the other, it does not always produce the effect of a very close correspondence to actual life and character.'

'He is Too Clever.

'I know of nothing that attests so plainly the preponderance of virtuosity in Mr. James's art as the indisposition of his readers to re-read his books.'

His Elusiveness.

'When we predicate elusiveness of Mr. James's fiction we mean much more than that his meaning is occasionally obscure. We mean that he himself always eludes us. The completeness with which he does so it is perhaps possible to consider the measure of his success. . . .

'The life which Mr. James's books brings close to our eyes, though manifold, is not rich. It is remarkably multifarious, but "rich" is precisely the last epithet that could properly be applied to it. . . '

Mr. James found to be Lacking in Heart.

'Why do the characters that people his novels possess so little personal interest? They have, seemingly, astonishingly little, even for their creator. So far from knowing their voices, as Thackeray said of his, he is apparently less occupied with them than about the situation—the "predicament," he would aptly say—in which he places them. When one thinks of the number of characters that Mr. James has created, each, as I have said, carefully individualised, and none of them replicas, an amazing world they certainly compose in their originality and variety—it is odd what an effort it is to recall even their names . . . .

'The explanation of this incompleteness of characterisation in Mr. James's nevertheless very precise personages consists, I think, in the fact that he rather pointedly neglects the province of the heart. . . .

'Are we to be interested in fiction without liking it? The fact that no one re-reads Mr. James means that his form, however adequate and effective, is not in itself agreeable. But it means still more that his "content" is not attaching. When Lockhart once made some remark to Scott about poets and novelists looking at life as mere material for art, the "Veteran Chief of Letters" observed: "I fear you have some very young ideas in your head. We shall never learn to feel and respect our real calling, unless we have taught ourselves to consider everything as moonshine compared with the education of the heart." Is it possible that Mr. James's controlling idea is a "young one"? Is his undoubted originality, after all, the exploitation of what seemed to so wise a practitioner as Scott "moonshine"? That would account, perhaps, for the pallid light that so often fills his canvas. . . .

'The voluntary abandonment by the novelist of such a field of interest as the province of the heart is witness, at all events, of an asceticism whose compensations ought in prudence to be thoroughly assured. Implied, understood—this domain! Very well, one may reply, but what a field of universal interest you neglect, what a rigorously puritanic sacrifice you make! . . .'

'Would it ever occur to anyone to suspect that Mr. James "loved" any of his characters? Ralph Touchett, perhaps; but surely the extraordinary attention that almost all his later personages receive from him is not an affectionate interest. . . . One winces at the scrutiny of defenceless personages practised by the narrators of the 'Pension Beaurepas,' a delightful sketch; of 'Four Meetings,' a masterpiece of satire and of pathos; and a dozen other tales in which some inhuman naturalist studies his spitted specimens. . . . He is not merely detached; his detachment is enthusiastic. One may say he is ardently frigid.' ['Ardently frigid' is rich! One may suppose it would be the sort of description of a railway smash which a neighbouring tree would give.]

Mr. James's Lack of Interest in the Past.

'Where the end of culture is so conspicuously achieved as it is in Mr. James, it is perhaps impertinent to inquire as to his use of the means. But where a writer's work is so voluminous as his, as well as of such a high order, it is in the interest of definition to inquire why his evident culture betrays so little evidence of interest in the classics of literature or the course of history. . . . The critic is conspicuous enough in Mr. James, but one cannot help thinking that precisely his kind of fiction would be more effective if he were more evidently érudit. For instance, a writer interested in the "Antigone," and, imbued with the spirit of its succession, would naturally and instinctively be less absorbed in "What Maisie Knew."'

Why a New Book is not an 'Event.'

'For lovers of "the last new book" Mr. James is no doubt the most important. But why should it not be an "event"—just as one of Thackeray's or George Eliot's used to be? It is certainly not because his talent is inferior; is it because his culture is limited, as well as because, as I have already said, his art is as theoretic as his philosophy of life is obscure?'

Compared with Fielding.

Referring to the 'futilities and niaseries' of what may be called Mr. James's masterpiece, 'The Awkward Age,' this critic says: 'One feels like asking brutally, in the name of literature, if it is worth while, if it is worth the lavish expenditure of the best literary talent we have.' [This is an American critic on an American novelist.] 'If it is, there is nothing more to be said. But it can only be said to be worth while by the amateur of novelty, and must seem attenuated from the standpoint of culture.

'It is not a matter of realism. Fielding was a realist, if ever there was one. But is it likely that without his classical culture such a realist as Fielding, even, would have depicted figures of such commanding importance and universal interest as those with which his novels are peopled? . . . From the point of view of culture as a factor in a novelist's production, it may be said, surely, that no one knows his own time who knows only it.'

His Later Style.

'We could readily forgo anything that he lacks, however, if he would demolish for us the chevaux-de-frise of his later style. In his early days his style was eminently clear, but in the course of years it has become an exceedingly complicated vehicle. Its complexity is probably quite voluntary . . . since his later, his preponderant, and what we must consider his true, manner has been established, no one needs to be reminded that obscurity has been one of its main traits. His concern is to be precise, not to be clear. He follows his thought with the most intimate exactness, no doubt, in its subtle sinuosities, into its complicated connotations, unto its utmost attenuations; but it is often so elusive, so insaisissable—by others than himself—that he may perfectly express without in the least communicating it. Yet the very texture of his obscurity is composed of incontestable evidences that he is a master of expression. The reader's pleasure becomes a task, and his task the torture of Tantalus.'

We have given long extracts—not, indeed, a twentieth part of the original article—because we have not often come across such a masterly analysis of an author, and we hope that editors of some of our English reviews will make a note of a critic who is not a dilettante by profession, but one who writes with knowledge con amore. What good reading his criticism of some of our English modern novelists would be.

A NOVEL BY MR. SWINBURNE.

The Athenæum says: 'The most interesting literary event of July will be the publication of a work of prose fiction by Mr. Swinburne. While dealing mainly with the love passion—as its name, "Love's Cross-Currents," implies—it satirises, with the humour and trenchant wit that the readers of "Heptalogia" are familiar with, certain characteristics of modern Society. The publishers in England will, of course, be Messrs. Chatto & Windus. In America they will be Messrs. Harper & Brothers.'

AMAZING EXTENT OF MR. CARNEGIE'S LIBRARY GIFTS.

Altogether there are now 1,352 Carnegie libraries in existence. During every hour of every day some of these libraries are open and in use. In New Zealand they enlighten the Maori; in the crowded East Side of New York City they uplift a congested foreign population; in Ireland they influence a struggling race. Without regard to creed or colour, they have everywhere taught the value of high intellectual ideals. They have placed, or will place when the buildings planned are erected, free reading within the reach of 25,000,000 people, and they represent a total benefaction of more than $40,000,000. No individual has ever contributed so much to a single cause or touched so many people. It is the most remarkable public service in the history of philanthropy, and its conduct is as unusual as the personality behind it. The businesslike system by which applications are received, examined, and considered is described, and the conditions imposed of local support are noted.—World's Work.

HOW HISTORICAL DOCUMENTS GET LOST.

In the preparation of a history some curious experiences are the lot of the historian. His faculty of research and careful analysis of contemporary documents are admitted qualifications; but, withal, he is not seldom met by difficulties that would ordinarily be unlooked for. For instance, few events in American national history were more passionately discussed than the acquisition of Texas. Secret negotiations for the American possession of the State had been conducted for a considerable time, and these culminated in the signing of a treaty on April 12, 1844. The terms of the instrument having been made public, the storm burst, and Congress held the matter up till the close of February 1845. Yet the treaty which was veiled in so much mystery, which gave birth to so much passionate oratory and brought about the war with Mexico, was sought in vain in the Texas State archives, nor could it be found in the State Department at Washington. It is to be found, however, in Volume IX. of the splendid 'History of North America,' published by George Barrie & Sons, 1313 Walnut Street, Philadelphia, for the publishers pushed their quest until they found it.

WHO WAS HE?

Under the title of 'Who Was He?' Messrs. George Routledge & Sons have just published a concise Dictionary of General Biography, compiled by Edward Latham. The little volume (3 inches by 4 inches and ½ inch wide) gives particulars of over five thousand British, American, and foreign celebrities of all ages—men and women. The booklet has been admirably printed by Messrs. Butler & Tanner, the paper is good, and the whole get-up makes it one of the best values in the way of a shilling net publication that we have ever seen. It is not a miniature curiosity, but a really valuable work of reference, being, as far as we have been able to test it, very accurate.

MODERN ELECTRIC PRACTICE.

The Gresham Publishing Company have now completed their great work on 'Modern Electric Practice' by publishing Volume VI., with an excellent index. The work is written by the best experts of the day, under the editorship of Mr. Magnus Maclean, M.A., Professor of Electrical Engineering in the Glasgow and West of England Technical College, and it is admirably and profusely illustrated. Volume VI. deals with telegraphy, telephony, electricity in mining, electric cranes, electro-medical appliances, and modern electrical appliances employed in the operation of railways. We are glad to hear that this important technical work has proved a great success; it is much the fashion to jeer at this country for being behind other nations, but it is a curious fact that though our people may be slow at the start, they always come out well ahead in the end.

LORD ACTON'S BEST BOOKS.

It seems to us that 'the 100 best books' fad should now be buried 100 fathoms deep in the sea of Oblivion—not a living soul was ever one bit the better for it, and not a living soul ever made a satisfactory list. Even the late Lord Acton, who is supposed to have been the most learned man of modern times, failed to compile a list which is satisfactory. Mr. W. P. James, referring to it in the Evening Standard and St. James's Gazette, says: 'It will appear probably to most readers to advertise his learning rather than to exhibit his judgment. The list, however, was compiled for the private guidance and delectation of a lady, and the author was the least self-advertising of mortal men; so that it should be unnecessary to say that he must be acquitted of the ordinary weakness of showing off. The limitation of Lord Acton's aim must also be borne in mind, and the natural bias of the theologically and politically constituted mind. Lord Acton's object was mainly to suggest to a competently educated youth a course of reading which would enable him to understand and estimate the intellectual forces that had gone to the making of his epoch. For this particular purpose, the preponderance of religious and politico-religious matter is perhaps justified. At all events the 'advanced' and 'progressive' persons of our day too generally underestimate and misjudge those forces; while the ecclesiastically minded of all sects are liable to lose in breadth and grasp what they gain in intensity of interest. Lord Acton's course of reading might leave Mr. Lloyd-George or the education committees of certain county councils sadder, but it would surely leave them wiser men. It is true that where Lord Acton's list comes within the compass of an ordinary man's criticism his selections do not all appear by any means unimpeachable. But, besides the fact that it was compiled more than twenty years ago, the inclusion of such a book as 'Mill's Logic,' for example, may be accounted for as a book responsible for a great deal of the political and philosophical views that went to make the Victorian epoch.

As Mr. Clement Shorter urges in his judicious introductory remarks, Lord Acton substantially ignores literature as such altogether. After giving the very necessary caution that all such lists are worse than valueless unless intelligently used according to the particular aims and conditions in contemplation, Mr. Shorter himself proceeds to give a much more practical list for the average reader. Mr. Shorter, by the way, criticises Lord Avebury for including 'Shakespeare' as one book, and himself offers only 'Hamlet'; yet he includes Euripides. It is true that the amount of Euripides is limited by the condition that he is to be translated by Sir Gilbert Murray. As such lists go, Mr. Shorter's is a good one; yet it does not include, for example, Lucian, Aristophanes, Rabelais, or Molière. Where lists are not meant for particular purposes or classes, the aim should be to include at least all the 'seminal' books. The four I have named have borne fruit abundantly.

HOW THE STEEL PEN WAS INVENTED.

'We owe the steel pen,' said an inventor in the Louisville Courier Journal, 'to a man named Gillott—Joseph Gillott—an Englishman.

'Gillott was a jeweller. He lived in Birmingham. One day, accidentally splitting the end of one of his fine steel jewel-making tools, he threw it peevishly on the floor.

'An hour later it was necessary for him to write a letter. Where, though, was his quill pen? He searched high and low, but could not find it. Looking finally on the floor, he discovered, not the pen, but the broken steel tool.

'"I wonder if I couldn't make shift to write with this?" he said.

'And he tried to write with the split steel, and, of course, he succeeded perfectly.

'To this episode we owe the steel pen, which has superseded the quill all over the world.'

THE COLONIAL GIRL.

'In English society the colonial girl has still got her way to make, and she hardly queens it as does the American. "Reason's plain," said one daughter of the Sunny South, 'we never gave John Bull the go-by. When I get back I'm going to vote for separation." Nevertheless the Australienne is coming on, and I have myself heard favourable comments on the pleasantness and softness of her manners as compared with the somewhat aggressive independence of Brother Jonathan's daughters. The New Zealand girl, so far as she is known, is a great favourite in England. Of all the Premiers' daughters that appeared in London during the Coronation year, the Misses Seddon are still remembered as quite the most charming and best liked.'—Constance Clyde, in the Otago (N.Z.) Witness.

[We think those who have had the pleasure of meeting any will agree with us that no more charming girls visit this country than those who come from Australasia.—Ed. P.C.]

FICTION OF TO-DAY AND OF FORTY YEARS AGO.

'A short time ago Mr. Andrew Lang had an article in the columns of a contemporary alluding to the overwhelming prevalence of the novel. By an ingenious, but altogether incorrect, method of computation, he made out that the novels published in a year totalled somewhere about 900, of which possibly 20 or 30 might survive to become known to posterity. A more accurate estimate is furnished by the annual return issued by the Publishers' Circular every January. The figures are as follows: In 1903 there were published 1,859 novels, tales, and sketches, and 801 new editions. In 1904 the figures were—Novels, &c., 1,731; new editions, 817; or 2,660 in 1903, and 2,548 in 1904, showing a decrease of 112 books. The serious works—history, biography, and science—did not amount to one-third of that number, which plainly shows that the taste for fiction greatly exceeds the desire for useful information. As to the quality of modern fiction compared with that formerly in vogue, there does not seem to be much improvement. About forty years ago the late Lord Neaves—the last humourist Judge of the Court of Session—contributed a poem to Blackwood's Magazine, in which he showed how the novel of that period was boiled into existence. As this remarkable poem is not now well known, a few verses may be quoted:

Try with me and mix
  What will make a novel,
All hearts to transfix
  In house or hall or hovel.
Put the cauldron on,
  Set the bellows blowing,
We'll produce anon
  Something worth the showing.

Never mind your plot,
  'Tisn't worth the trouble;
Throw into the pot
  What will boil and bubble.
Character's a jest,
  What's the use of study?
All will stand the test
  That's black enough and bloody.

Here's the 'Newgate Guide,'
  Here's the 'Causes Célèbres,' Tumble in beside
  Pistol, gun, and sabre.
These Police reports,
  Those Old Bailey trials,
Horrors of all sorts
  To match the Seven Vials.

Crime that breaks all bounds,
  Bigamy and arson,
Poison, blood, and wounds,
  Will carry well the farce on.
Now it's just in shape,
  Yet with fire and murder,
Treason, too, and rape
  Might help it all the further.

Stir the broth about,
  Keep the furnace glowing,
Soon we'll pour it out
  In three bright volumes flowing.
Some may jest and jibe,
  We know where the shop is Ready to subscribe
  For a thousand copies.

The recipe thus outlined by Lord Neaves so long ago is still followed pertinaciously, the chief difference being that the mixture is not made up in three volumes, but is now condensed into one volume. Surely it is a dispensation of Providence that most of the stuff of this kind is rapidly forgotten.'—Dundee Advertiser.

A Scriptural Justification. — When Chaucer says of his doctor of physic that his study was but little on the Bible, he was echoing a popular calumny on the profession which has lasted to our day. To what good purpose, however, doctors can on occasion apply Scripture was shown by Sir James Simpson when, in reply to the foolish preacher who denounced him for using chloroform to enable women to escape the curse pronounced on Eve, he quoted the case of Adam, who was thrown into a deep sleep before his rib was removed.

AN AMERICAN LIBRARIAN'S TRAMP ABROAD.

Librarian Frank P. Hill, who recently made a tour through Europe for the purpose of visiting the foreign libraries to get ideas for the local library, read a paper on his travels and observations. Mr. Hill said in part:

'The trip lasted seventy days, during which time I passed through six countries, visited sixty-two libraries and fifty-three book stores in twenty-seven cities. The most advantageous portion of the trip was that through Great Britain, as the public libraries there are more like our own, and form a better basis for comparison. Some interesting points are to be noted as follows:

'Libraries have smaller appropriations in Europe than in America. The library movement is gaining ground in Germany and Switzerland, but there seems to be little progress in France. Nearly all public libraries have separate rooms for men and women. In Germany the public libraries are intended for poor people. All libraries close part of the year for cleaning, and some of them every day in the week for the same purpose.

'Great Britain has made great strides in public library matters the past seven years. In England there is less co-operation among librarians than in America. There appears to be considerable rivalry between the supporters of the open access system and those who favour closed shelves. General reading rooms in Great Britain are larger and are used more than here. The best public libraries of Great Britain are quite as good as our best. This is particularly true of Liverpool, Manchester, Birmingham, and some of the libraries in London.

'The reference libraries of Europe are very much ahead of ours. All the public libraries of Great Britain have a central building. I was impressed with the necessity for the addition of this most important feature to our own system, and upon my return home this was brought to my mind very forcibly by reading in the papers that the property now leased as an office building was likely to be taken for park purposes. American libraries make better provision for children than do foreign libraries. Most of the English public libraries separate boys from girls. Children's rooms are open only between 5 and 9. The decimal system of classification, same as adopted in Brooklyn, is used both in Leeds and Manchester, two of the largest public libraries in England.

'Berlin supports twenty-eight branches and twelve reading rooms on a very meagre appropriation. Mr. Hugo Heimann supports at his own expense a better public library than the city.

'In Dresden Dr. A. B. Meyer, director of the Geological Museum, conducted me through his institution, which has many interesting library features.

'I spent three days in Leipzig, paying more attention to the book stores than to the libraries.

'At Frankfort the Rothschild library has a curious rule which permits readers to take non-fiction home, but requires them to read novels in the library itself.

'In Paris the Arondissement libraries under the control of the Board of Education first received my attention. The Bibliothèque Nationale is the largest library in the world, having upwards of 3,000,000 volumes.

'The British Museum received much of my time. I spent hours in this splendid library.

'The public libraries of London are located in the different cities making up Greater London, and in the same city there may be three or four libraries with chief librarians, who are responsible to the same body, the Municipal Council.

'The Finsbury Library, Clerkenwell, is the best representative of the open-shelf system in the city, and the librarian, James Duff Brown, is its strongest advocate.

'The Patent Office Library, Mr. Hulme, has a collection of 120,000 volumes, said to be one of the best in the world.

'The last weeks of my stay were spent among the provincial towns, going to Cardiff, Wales; Edinburgh and Glasgow, Scotland; and Leeds, Manchester, Liverpool, Bath, and Bristol, England.

'Liverpool and Manchester have splendid library systems and appear to take the lead in Great Britain, merely looking from the American point of view.'—Brooklyn Citizen.

ALDERMAN KEAY'S RETIREMENT FROM BUSINESS.

EVERYONE who knows Mr. H. W. Keay—and no man is better known or respected in the book trade—will join us in congratulating him on being able, in the prime of life, to retire from the fine bookselling business which he has built up at Eastbourne. We are glad to know that, so far is it from Mr. Keay's intention to sever his connection with the trade, that he intends to devote more time to its interests than he has done even in the past. Our readers will have been made aware of the fact that Mr. Keay has agreed to continue to act as President of the Associated Booksellers of Great Britain and Ireland, and our report of the great meeting at Edinburgh in the PUBLISHERS' CIRCULAR of June 17 bears abundant testimony to the hearty goodwill with which Mr. Keay was re-elected President and his great services acknowledged by speaker after speaker. Mr. Keay long ago won the confidence not only of his own Association, but also of that of the publishers of Great Britain and Ireland, and all, we are sure, will join us in wishing that he may have good health long to enjoy that otium cum dignitate which he has so well earned.

The following particulars are from the Eastbourne Gazette:

'After an honourable and successful business career, Alderman H. W. Keay has sold the goodwill and stock of the Imperial Library in Terminus Road, of which he has been the proprietor for thirty-five years. The purchasers are Messrs. W. H. Smith & Son, of 186 Strand, and the Railway Bookstalls, who will carry on the establishment on the same lines as hitherto, with the addition of new features from time to time. A native of Brighton, Mr. Keay entered a solicitor's office on leaving school; and he was subsequently in the employ of Messrs. W. H. Smith & Son at Brighton, Worthing, and Eastbourne. By unflagging industry and perseverance he has been able to rise slowly but steadily to a position of independence; and he is now able, at a comparatively early age, to retire and to secure as tenants of his property in Terminus Road the great firm with which he was connected in his youth. During the time he was in business in Eastbourne he has had many distinguished patrons, among them being King Edward (then Prince of Wales), the late Grand Duke of Hesse and the Princess Alice, and the late Empress of Germany. Since the fact of his retirement became known Alderman Keay has received many gratifying letters from the leading publishers, with whom he has become personally acquainted during his tenure of office as chairman of the Associated Booksellers of Great Britain and Ireland. We understand that Messrs. W. H. Smith & Son have appointed Mr. Crumpton as the manager of the Imperial Library, and that he has already commenced his duties. Mr. Crumpton, who comes to Eastbourne from Birkenhead, has been connected with the firm for twenty-three years, and it is intended to make every branch of the business thoroughly up to date.'

MR. JOSEPH BRAITHWAITE ELECTED MAYOR OF GREATER DUNEDIN.

NEARLY three columns of the Otago Daily Times are devoted to a report of the proceedings in connection with the election of Mr. Joseph Braithwaite, the well-known bookseller of Dunedin, to the office of Mayor of Greater Dunedin. It is evident from his reply to the congratulations so heartily bestowed on him by his fellow citizens that the duties of the position are not light. We give a few extracts from his speech:

Mr. Braithwaite, who on rising was greeted with applause, said: I cordially appreciate the distinguished honour just conferred upon me as first elected Mayor of Greater Dunedin—a city to be proud of, and which I have seen grow from its infancy. (Applause.) By close attention to the varied duties of the mayoral office I hope to repay your confidence in me and the many kind things you have said, and to preserve the dignity of the position and that of the citizens generally. Indeed, I will do my best to realise the anticipations you have formed of me, but if in some respects I should fail I hope you will recollect that to err is human, to forgive divine. With the council's hearty assistance I hope to see pushed to a finish during my term of office the electric power and tramway and Waitati water schemes. The awkward knots of a few months ago are untied, and the work is going on vigorously. As for the gasworks question, which the new gas committee should at once inquire into, I am satisfied we cannot reduce the price of gas or transfer any of the profits to the municipal department while we pay for extensions and additions to works out of revenue. Then, in consequence of amalgamation, the administration of public works should be reorganised and consolidated. Then the magnitude of the business now done by the council demands that a sufficient salary shall be offered as will induce a man of talent to take up the town clerk's position as general manager practically of the whole concern. Then the general or municipal account, which is always in trouble, must live within its income, but to do this the ratepayers should moderate their demand for luxuries. The other departments are paying, including the operating portions of the tramways, so there need be no anxiety on their account. It is too early to prophesy about the Waipori electric power and light, but everything points to the fact that this will ultimately be one of the best assets of the city. This work must be pushed vigorously, as every day's delay means loss of interest and of revenue. Let me bear testimony to the faithful and unselfish services of every member of the late council. In again thanking the citizens for elevating me to the highest position it is in their power to bestow, I hope when my term of office expires that I shall still retain their esteem and confidence. I also thank those present for their attendance, and all those who have sent me letters and telegrams of congratulation. (Applause.)

THE LIBRARY ASSOCIATION.

THE twenty-eighth annual meeting of the Library Association, which is to be held at Cambridge on August 22, 23, and 24 next, promises to be an interesting affair. A great many papers are to be read, including three on bookbinding—one by Mr. Cyril J. Davenport, on 'Bookbinding and Book Production' (lantern lecture); one on 'Library Bindings,' by Mr. E. R. Norris Matthews, Librarian of the Bristol Public Libraries; and one on 'Library Bookbinding,' by Mr. Cedric Chivers, the well-known bookbinder of Bath. The discussions on these papers will be opened by Mr. F. T. Barrett, Librarian of the Glasgow Public Libraries, and Mr. G. W. Hulme, Librarian of the Patent Office Library, London. There is to be a further report of the Committee on Cataloguing Rules, a paper on 'A Central Cataloguing Bureau,' and exhibitions of (a) library appliances, (b) bookbinding and materials, (c) an exhibit (with the co-operation of the publishers concerned) of the best books of 1904. All inquiries respecting papers, discussions, and exhibits should be addressed to Mr. Henry Bond, Hon. Sec., Publications Committee, Woolwich Public Library.

ITALIAN LITERATURE.

ALL who are interested in Italian literature should see the 'Catalogo Antiquario,' No. 15, published by Mr. Bernardo Seebey, Via Tornabuoni 28, Florence. It contains particulars of over 4,000 works.

'THE YOUNG MAN.'

THE Young Man for July touches the life of men at many points. Not only is the religious side considered by the continuance of the Rev. R. J. Campbell's articles upon Christian Fundamentals and literary interests provided for by several pages of book reviews and excerpts, but there are also Holiday Articles. Dr. Robertson Wallace deals with a medical man's experience of the 'Open Air Life,' and advises camping out; Mr. Richard Annesley describes a fortnight on the Broads. 'Reminders of R. L. Stevenson,' which is well illustrated, is sure to be read with interest by those journeying to Scotland; and Hints and Suggestions are given concerning Holiday Places in the Far North as well as the Sunny South. Mr. Eustace Miles, M.A., the well-known athlete, discusses Lawn Tennis, and raises the query, 'Is it a Manly Game?' which he answers with considerable skill. There are many other features in this excellent number—a story by Shan F. Bullock, entitled 'Orange and Green,' and a Character Sketch of the Rev. J. H. Jowett, M.A., of Carr's Lane, from a young man's standpoint. In all, an excellent threepennyworth.

THE CONSOLATIONS OF POETRY.

'SOME men could not face life without the aid of poetry,' claims a writer in the Academy and Literature:

'To the most materialistic must come at times a feeling that without "the light that never was" man's place would be one of ghastly sadness, dull fact, dull, plodding business, worthless ambition, material pleasure, a stark and bare world unlit by a single glimmer of the imaginative light that glorifies it. Of course, all men are poets, though some are not aware of it, and many would scoff at the thought, as at an insult, connecting poets with dreamers and imbeciles, who do not look facts in the face; whereas they are only seers who behold more than the fact—and other facts—and are able to express what they have seen: only men who have lived and felt intensely, and are able to express what they have felt. For poetry is the deepest utterance of life—of life's joy, of life's agony; and the time that has been most living in the nation's history has produced the greatest poets. Life and poetry are not separable. "By thine own tears thy song shall tears beget, O singer," is an incontrovertible truth, a test by which all poetry lives or dies; moreover, the greatest quality in life is sincerity, and sincerity is the only soil from which a poem can grow to lasting beauty.'

Of the lover of poetry this writer goes on to speak with unabashed enthusiasm:

'Experience tends to show him that there is no petty nuisance in the play of circumstance, no great joy in life, and no great trouble, which poetry cannot smooth away or heighten, or make tolerable by investing the joy or the anguish with the beauty that lies in the depth of every human emotion. Take an instance how it lifts him from pettiness. He comes back tired with reality after riding on a slow tram or underground in metropolitan despair, and can see nothing but the crowd and the dirt and the weariness of life; then he turns to the splendid unreality of Spenser and paces with Artegall, knight of justice, and Talus, his page of iron mould, down the green glades of Faerieland, delivering lovely ladies from their cruel tyrants, slaying the Paynim, grappling with the "cursed cruel Sarrazin," or, leaving all care for meaning, reads on, allured by the cadence of the verse, soothed and sustained by its sheer music, and the book droops in his hand and his mind gains a wider outlook and other lines come to him.

> Brightness falls from the air;
> Queens have died young and fair;
> Dust hath closed Helen's eyes;

and gradually the heart opens like a flower before the flooding light of Beauty, and the conviction that had faltered becomes strong again, and the whole soul echoes the great cry of Keats—

> . . . In spite of all
> Some shape of beauty moves away the pall
> From our dark spirits.

And the material side, which is only half, and the less important half, of life, gives place to the spiritual, which is life's true reality. "From link to link it circulates the soul of the world."'

THE AMERICAN CATALOGUE OF BOOKS, 1900-1905.

THE 'American Catalogue,' issued heretofore in quarto volumes, will be succeeded by the new 'American Catalogue' in octavo size, of which the first volume, covering the five years January 1900 to January 1, 1905, is nearly ready. It will be continued by a corresponding publication every five years hereafter.

It will be a final cumulation of the titles given in the Publishers' Weekly system of record by author, title, subject and series entries, including titles issued during those years but not entered in the year of publication. Under this system author entries are designated by full-faced type, title entries by ordinary Roman lower-case, subject entries by small caps, and series entries by italics, so that the system has the advantages of the dictionary catalogue with the advantages of distinctive author, title, subject, and series alphabets. Each entry gives author's name with initials, title, date of publication, series name, size, price, and publisher. Thus the leading facts regarding the book are put immediately at the service of the seeker.

This volume takes the place this year of the 'Annual American Catalogue,' which will be resumed in 1906.

If demand should justify, and not otherwise, it is proposed to complement this five-year Catalogue with a second or supplementary volume, including the full-title entries with annotations given in the Weekly Record of the American Publishers' Weekly, cumulated into an alphabet for each year—i.e. into five alphabets. This is planned to answer the demand of such libraries, book dealers, and others who want the full material of the Publishers' Weekly bibliographical system in available shape.

Both volumes will be substantially bound in half-morocco, similar to the old 'American Catalogue.' The price will be £2 2*s*. net for the two together, or 25*s*. net for either separately. Intending subscribers are especially requested to send in orders promptly, stating whether both volumes are desired or only the first.

The first volume will soon be ready for delivery, and the second volume, if demanded, later in the year. The edition will in both cases be limited to the indicated demand.

PRICES.

1 copy 'American Catalogue,' 2 vols., 1900-1905, half-morocco, at £2 2*s*. net.
1 copy 'American Catalogue,' 1st vol. (cumulated) only, 25*s*. net.
1 copy 'American Catalogue,' 2nd vol. (full entries) only, 25*s*. net.

The English publishers of this important work of reference, so ably edited and produced by Mr. R. R. Bowker, are Messrs. Kegan Paul, Trench, Trübner & Co., Ltd.

THE WONDERS OF PEAT.

WE live in an age of utilitarianism. Science has taught us that waste is not necessary, and that from the most unpromising material the useful commodities may be manufactured. One of the most wonderful instances of the utilisation of seemingly barren matter is to be seen in the present method of dealing with peat in England—those boggy, spongy, apparently worthless masses which cover hundreds of acres between Manchester and Warrington. A London Daily Dispatch representative recently made a trip over the Risley Moss, where some 600 acres of bog-land are under treatment. Here, with the latest one can see the peat transformed from sodden chunks to delicate surgical dressings, fine fluffy powder for packing fruit in, stable bedding of the finest description, and many other uses. So delicate is some of the fibre that it has been made into ladies' hair pads, while many tons of the best peat are sent away to factories, where it is transformed into a very good imitation leather. This 'leather' is said to be an improvement on the cheaper kinds of real hide. In the manufacture of the coarser sorts of paper it has now a recognised value.

The discovery that peat contains a large amount of boracic acid caused the finer qualities to find favour for surgical dressings, and the same properties make it exceptionally useful as a preservative packing for tomatoes and fruit. Many hundred tons of packing are dispatched from Risley to the Canary Islands for fruit-packing purposes. As a bedding for horses its antiseptic qualities assure its popularity. It is in use in all the King's stables, and in those of the nobility. It is found, too, in the majority of racing stables. It is perhaps in the nature of another injustice to Ireland that many tons of peat packing for potatoes are sent there, because, as most people know, the Green Isle has hundreds of miles of peat unexploited.

The life of a peat field is ordinarily about twenty-five years. When the first layer of some four feet in depth is taken off in the shape of bricks it is allowed to dry in the winds and sun for from twelve to eighteen months. Meanwhile, it is stacked in winrows and pyramids, and when sufficiently seasoned it is removed to the crushing and packing house

By Hydraulic Pressure

The cleansed, riddled, and crushed peat is packed tightly for export. By this time it has been reduced in weight by seventy-five per cent. since the moment it was cut. By the time the first layer is removed the peat has sprung up almost to the original level, and so they go on cutting at it till black soil is reached. Then the land is ready for cultivation, and no better soil can be found. It will grow almost anything in profusion except potatoes. The men who work on the cuttings have to wear wooden pattens to prevent them sinking into the bog. The implements used in cutting are of special design, and it is a curious fact that, though of steel, they never rust, the action of the peat, however wet, preserving them in a perfectly bright state. There are those who believe with Mr. Bennet, the manager of the Risley Company, that the exploitation of peat moss is yet in its infancy. He thinks that a great many more uses will be found for it.

ANCIENT REASONS FOR LEARNING GREEK.

An ancient Dean of Christ Church is said to have given three reasons for the study of Greek: the first was that it enabled you to read the words of the Saviour in the original tongue; the second, that it gave you a proper contempt for those who were ignorant of it; and the third was that it led to situations of emolument. What a rich aroma hangs about this judgment! The first reason is probably erroneous, the second is un-Christian, and the third is a gross motive which would equally apply to any professional training whatsoever.—From 'From a College Window' in the Cornhill Magazine for July.

'THE GLASS IN THE PARISH CHURCH OF LUDLOW.'

Mr. George Woolley, the well-known bookseller of Ludlow, has just published a little work, price 1*s.* net, entitled 'The Glass in the Parish Church of Ludlow; also, an Account of the Missing Ludlow Glass mentioned in the Ashmolean MS. of 1663,' by Henry T. Weyman, F.S.A.

In a prefatory note Mr. Woolley, who has himself published so much about the grand church and Ludlow generally, says: 'This work, on a subject which has never been fully treated before, will be found deeply interesting, characterised as it is by patient historical research. Not only is the history of the Glass dealt with, but from the days of the Palmers' Guild and Norman Barons downwards to the nineteenth century this account throws historic sidelights on many ancient and honoured families who had territorial or family connections with Ludlow, its church, or its castle. On reading the manuscript for the first time I found it so absorbing that I could not put it down until I had read the last word Mr. Weyman had to say; therefore, to have the opportunity of publishing and placing before the public the result of Mr. Weyman's special study of this subject, at a popular price, is to me a great pleasure.'

The work contains illustrations.

FREE REQUESTS FROM FREE LIBRARIES.

Dear Sir,—The enclosed application has been received, and should prove of interest to all concerned with the publishing and bookselling trades.

It is perhaps needless to add that the request so frankly tendered has not been complied with.—Yours faithfully,

Harrison & Sons.
E. Cooper, Manager.

Here is a copy of the circular referred to:

STAMFORD PUBLIC FREE LIBRARY.

Barn Hill House, Stamford.

Dear Sir,—A Public Free Library, under the management of a Committee appointed by the Town Council and supported by public rate, is in course of erection in this borough, and will shortly be opened for the use of the inhabitants. Many publishers of newspapers, magazines, and books very generously support the Free Library movement by sending weekly, monthly, quarterly, or annual papers and periodicals for the use of readers.

The Committee would be greatly indebted to you and very grateful if you could kindly present a copy of each issue of Burke's 'Peerage, Baronetage and Knightage,' as published, or any books, directories, and other publications for the reading room, reference library, or lending library. The income from the penny rate is only £137 a year, so that the amount available for the purchase of papers, magazines, and books, after payment of necessary working expenses, will be very limited.

The committee are anxious to open with a good supply of all kinds of literature, and I shall be obliged if you will let me know whether you can make the above contribution—if so, I will write you when we should be ready to accept your kind offer.

Yours faithfully,
Herbert Hart,
Chairman of Free Library Committee.

[The circular is printed, except in the space where Burke's 'Peerage' is filled in in ink, so that doubtless it is a circular which is sent out pretty freely. What we cannot understand is how some people imagine that booksellers and publishers get their living—they seem to think it is done by giving books and other publications away. It would be interesting to know what an expensive Peerage is wanted for in a provincial Free Library.—Ed.]

THE LATE MR. NORMAN MACLEOD.

Dear Sir,—I have read with great pleasure your appreciative articles on my late brother-in-law, Mr. Macleod.

It may be of interest to the trade in general to know that the business is being carried on by his two sons, on the same lines, under trustees, of whom I am one.

Special attention will be paid to the Celtic department of the business, to which the late Mr. Macleod devoted so much energy.—Yours faithfully,

John MacDiarmid.

HARMSWORTH ENCYCLOPÆDIA.

Dear Sir,—Various letters have appeared in the Publishers' Circular respecting this publication, and it appears to me that the publishers, not content with the kernel, require the shell as well. The terms on which it is supplied to the trade are by no means of a flattering description, and now when it comes to the binding Harmsworths state that only the pronouncing index is given with the official bindings, and invite purchasers to send their books to them to be bound. It is true that Harmsworth's allow a commission on the binding to the bookseller, but after the latter has paid the carriage in sending same to them the profit seems to run rather thin. Why cannot Harmsworths sell the index separately, same as other magazine proprietors do? In fact, in nine cases out of ten the index is given in the last part of a volume and the subscriber may have it bound to his liking. I think it is a great pity this index is not procurable separately. I believe I am right in saying that the index to the 'Flag to Pretoria' was issued separately. Now, I have no cause to make any complaint against the Harmsworth binding, but why should our customers be compelled to have these bindings in order to get this index? Sir Alfred Harmsworth may write fifty Prefaces if he will only give the trade the opportunity of getting the index. It would be rather interesting to know who predominates in issuing this very excellent Encyclopædia, whether Harmsworths or Nelsons, as I feel sure the latter would not wish to do anything contrary to the interests of the trade, and if Harmsworths wish to keep the good feelings of the trade, who have done so much for them in distributing their wares, they will consent to selling the index separately. They can compete then with their own bindings, and if a customer wishes for their binding the bookseller will send it to them; but to tell their subscribers the index is only issued with their bindings to my mind partakes too much of a monopoly, which is deeply resented by the trade, who in selling the Encyclopædia make only an extremely narrow profit, and if the binding is only confined to the official bindings it concontinues so.—Yours faithfully,

A Country Bookseller.

[There is no doubt that in this instance the booksellers and newsagents have a grievance, and it seems to us a solid one, against

Messrs. Harmsworth. Unless it was made clear at the outset that they would only supply that integral and indispensable part of the work—the index—to those who took their binding; if they did not do this, then, in common justice to thousands of subscribers who have bought the Encyclopædia with a view to bind it to match their other books, the index should be supplied separately. If it is not supplied, Messrs. Harmsworth may gain some more money, but they will lose in reputation — which means loss in both eventually.—Ed.]

COUNTRY LIFE AND THE ACADEMY.

Dear Sir,—Will you kindly note that Country Life and the Academy have removed from their temporary offices in Southampton Street to their new building, 20 Tavistock Street, and oblige yours truly,

P. Anderson Graham.

Notices of Books

From Mr. George Allen.—'William the Conqueror: an Historical Drama,' by James F. Waight. Mr. Waight has been a little ambitious in his choice of subject—the invasion of this country by the Norman Duke—but the result quite justifies the endeavour. His treatment evinces a keen sense of dramatic effect, and the lines in which he has unfolded the story are for the most part melodious, dignified, and well worthy of so elevated a theme. Probably the character of the hapless Harold will enlist the sympathies of the reader even more than that of William the Conqueror, and the simple direct honesty of the one as contrasted with the wiliness of the other will not be lost sight of. The background is made up of a crowd of Norman and Saxon soldiers, priests, &c.

From Mr. H. R. Allenson.—'The Quest of the Infinite,' by Benjamin A. Millard. Though one may not agree with all that Mr. Millard says, one is compelled to respect his views, for they are advanced with modesty and sincerity. The aim of his essays is to show that religion is not in essence theological; the surest ground for faith in Christ is neither theology, nor metaphysics, nor science, but simple experience. He urges this appeal: 'Give Christ the opportunity of doing His work in your own heart and life; give Him a fair chance, and then judge Him by the results.'

From Messrs. Adam & Charles Black.—'Regional Geography: Europe and the Mediterranean Region,' by J. B. Reynolds, B.A. In the first part of this book the author has endeavoured to give students a grasp of those important physical facts in accordance with which countries have been divided into 'natural regions,' and in the second part to show the influence of the physical features of such areas on the life of mankind. In furtherance of this object special attention has been paid to the relief of the land and to climate, and several maps have been introduced to illustrate these phenomena. The book, being clear and distinct in its teaching and logically arranged, is likely to be serviceable to students.

From Messrs. S. C. Brown, Langham & Co., Ltd.—'The Pride o' the Morning,' by Agnes Giberne. The vicar of Midfell gave this name to Phyllis Wyverne, a very charming personage, whose love story runs a fairly even course through these pages. It is hardly surprising that both Colin Keith and Giles Randolph should fall in love with her, and the mystery which surrounds these two men, brothers by adoption, is pleasantly maintained to the end of the tale. Both the men are strongly portrayed, and are attractive in their different ways; and if Mrs. Keith is a little difficult to understand, there are several very naturally drawn characters in the book—Barbara Pringle, with her narrow-minded religion, for instance, and the grannie. The novel is decidedly interesting, and is well written.

From Messrs. Burns & Oates, Ltd.—'The Holy Catholic Church: her Faith, Works, and Triumphs,' by a Convert. The reason put forward for the writing of this book is the low ebb to which morality and religion have sunk in this Protestant country. 'Churches and chapels with their clergy and ministers abound, but the views held by the latter, whether domestic or political, are destructive of Christian morality; while the former claim no infallible teaching, and can therefore have no permanent hold of the conscience of the people.' The author lays no claim to originality or personal research in this volume, but bases his argument on sources of information which he believes to be trustworthy. Naturally such a book from the Protestant point of view is calculated to raise any number of false issues, though in the mind of the devout Roman Catholic it may seem only an unanswerable exposition of the true faith.

From the Caxton Publishing Company, Chancery Lane, W.C. — 'Monograms and Ciphers,' designed and drawn by A. A. Turbayne and other members of the Carlton Studio. Of recent years there has been a distinct tendency in public taste towards greater simplicity of form both in printing types and lettering, and in the more decorative monograms and ciphers. The aim of the present work—of which the volume before us is only a first instalment, there being six more parts to follow—is to encourage this tendency; but in order that the book may appeal to various tastes and thus be of greater value samples of many styles are included, pruned of their superfluous flourishes. When complete in its seven divisions it will contain over twelve hundred designs, together with twenty-seven plates of alphabets and numerals. Presuming that the originality and artistic workmanship observable in the first part are maintained, there should be slight doubt of the complete success of the production. Volumes of monographs are for obvious reasons comparatively scarce, and designers and decorative craftsmen should welcome with cordial appreciation so useful an addition to their store. Apart from its technical worth, the book also calls for praise by reason of its capital printing and artistic binding.

From Messrs. Chapman & Hall, Ltd., we have received a new and cheaper edition of George Gissing's 'By the Ionian Sea.' These notes of a ramble in Southern Italy are charming, and in reading them one comes to know the man who wrote them and to take part in the enjoyment that he felt.

From Messrs. Chatto & Windus.—'Cloclo,' by Gyp. For many years this authoress of novels depicting French life and character, and who is otherwise known as La Comtesse Martel, has found favour with a select class of English readers. The present story has for its heroine the adopted daughter of one Monsieur d'Erdéval, and subsequently becomes the chosen lover or Monsieur Jean, a generous and ardent admirer of the sometime penniless but beautiful girl, whose early life was a sad one. The story may truly be considered a 'love idyll,' inasmuch as the remaining characters in their various relationships are but subsidiary helps towards shaping the main currents of the romance. We have followed the fortunes of the heroine with intense interest, and we feel sure the reader will not fail in doing likewise.

From Messrs. Archibald Constable & Co. Ltd.—'A Garden of Eden,' by Edith A. Barnett. This description of 'Kempton Park once upon a time' is very delightful, and full of loving touches. The sub-title of the book may possibly cause the sporting man to open it, but it is far too idyllic to interest him much, and he will find nothing concerning his particular pastime. It is a record of Eve and Adam, both girls by the way, who wandered there as children, whose home it was, long ago; and in perusing these pages the reader is likely to wish that the place were to-day as it used to be. He will grow very charmed with its shady woods and ponds, very fond of the people who lived upon the estate, and of the Guardian Angel who looked after the children. Her marriage was the beginning of the end so far as the children were concerned, and, although we have no desire to appear Puritanical, this book makes us feel that something valuable was really lost when the Old Kempton Park disappeared to make way for the new.

From Messrs. J. M. Dent & Co.—'Practical Nature Study for Schools,' by Oswald H. Latter, M.A. Part 1, Questions for Pupils. This book, above everything, is practical in its methods. The object of the author is to provide lessons in nature-study such that the work must be done by each individual pupil as the result of direct observation. A space is left below each question for the insertion of the answer, and there are also blank pages which may be used for various purposes in connection with tuition — drawings, summarising results, and such like. The work will be found of a thoroughly useful character.

From Mr. Henry J. Drane.—'Smiles from the Suburbs,' by R. H. Roberts. Probably no great value is claimed by the author himself for the sketches in this little volume, but they are amusing enough after a fashion and eloquently testify to Mr. Roberts's appreciation of the humorous aspects of everyday life. Whether taking a trip on the 'Continong,' discussing the best method of disposing of garden rubbish (which, it seems, is to throw it over the wall into your neighbour's plot), or relating the lamentable sea-going experiences of his friend 'Brown,' Mr. Roberts shows a cheeriness of disposition that should ensure him a green old age.

From Messrs. R. A. Everett & Co.—'The Wicked Life,' by T. W. H. Crosland. 'If the liars of London were struck dead we should hear no more of overcrowded railway carriages' is a fair sample of the verbal dexterity and trifling of this booklet. The object of Mr. Crosland's bludgeoning on this occasion is the Wicked Liver, and he slashes away at him on every possible occasion. It is not for the sober and serious-minded reader, but for the average man who likes a laugh, whether with or at his author, it is amusing reading for half an hour.

From Messrs. T. C. & E. C. Jack.—'The Told to the Children Series.' No. 1, 'Stories of Robin Hood,' by H. E. Marshall; No. 2, 'Stories of King Arthur's Knights,' by Mary Macgregor. These dainty volumes, illustrated in colours, will be very welcome wherever there are children. Every parent knows the difficulty of reading from a book to a child; much has to be omitted or paraphrased to bring the story within the child's intelligence, and this is not always easy. Here the stories are retold in simple language and with interesting illustrations by well-known artists, ready to be told or read. Our young reviewers are looking forward to further volumes with great expectations.

From Messrs. Jarrold & Sons.—'The Dog from Clarkson's, a Vagary,' by Desmond F. T. Coke. This is a most ingenious story of mystery, sentiment, and love, and chiefly is concerned with the doings of one Ronald Tweedie, who in his masquerading feats as a canine hero is the producer of many ludicrous and pathetic complications. The extravagant plot is worked out in a decidedly deft manner by the author, and the novel will be much appreciated by readers who are in need of exhilarating fiction for a dull hour.

From Mr. Thomas Law.—'The Whole Armour of God,' by George S. Barrett, D.D. Dr. Barrett has selected a short passage from St. Paul's Epistle to the Ephesians, and has written a series of sermonettes on the separate clauses. It has been his aim to make his exposition as practical as possible, and he has in part succeeded. There is, however, little in his book which is not perfectly obvious to every man who has any real education; the young and ignorant will no doubt derive benefit from its perusal.

From Messrs. Longmans, Green & Co.—'A Bibliography of Works in English on Playing Cards and Gaming,' compiled by Frederick Jessel. In addition to the books indicated by the title, the author has included many books on conjuring which contain tricks with cards, and a few plays and works of fiction which depend on gaming for their plots or contain scenes which illustrate the mode of playing some particular game. The Bibliography seems very complete, as we have only been able to discover one small omission of one of the editions of Hoyle's 'Games Modernised' issued in 1863, and that may be only a reprint of some earlier edition with slight alterations. It contains a useful index, so that any particular subject can be easily looked up. Although the Preface is dated May 1905, we notice the omission of the 'Bridge Book,' by 'Cut Cavendish,' published a short while back, and it should probably be regarded as complete only to the end of 1904. Should prove of the greatest service to all students of the subjects dealt with.

From Messrs. W. & J. Mackay, Ltd., 176 High Street, Chatham.—'Professional Papers of the Corps of Royal Engineers,' edited by Major A. T. Moore, R.E. (Royal Engineers Institute Occasional Papers, Vol. 30.) Many interesting and to some extent instructive articles are included in this volume, including contributions on 'Convoys in War,' by Colonel C. St. L. Barter, C.B.; 'The Anglo-Liberian Boundary Commission, 1903,' by Lieut. E. W. Cox, R.E.; 'Fortification in Tactical Application,' by Captain H. F. Thuillier, R.E.; 'Pumps and Air Lifts for Raising Water,' by Percy Griffith, M.Inst.C.E.; 'Pieter's Hill, a Tactical Study,' by Major F. A. Molony, R.E.; and 'Sewer Ventilation,' by W. Brown. The work is illustrated with upwards of sixty plates, which greatly add to its efficiency and professional interest.

From Messrs. Marshall Brothers.—'The Epistle of the Hebrews,' by W. Douglas Moffat, M.A. In a style artificial and forced Mr. Moffat has attempted to write 'a fair and clear outline of the main teaching' of the Epistle to the Hebrews, with a view 'to guide the reader in his personal study.' The author evinces understanding of this profound book of Scripture, but his elucidatory remarks are often mere platitude.

From Mr. Andrew Melrose.—'Our Industrial Outcasts.' Edited by Will Reason, M.A. Various members of the Christian Social Brotherhood—a Society formed for the discussion of social problems—have written essays on the pressing and unsolved problem of the unemployed. Mr. Will Reason, M.A., the secretary of the brotherhood, has contributed two able papers, the first of which, 'Causes of Unemployment,' is perhaps the most important in the volume; Mr. B. Kirkman Gray writes on 'The Unemployed before A.D. 1760,' Mr. W. Carter Piggott on 'The Extent of the Evil,' Mr. Percy Alden, M.A., on 'Examination of Remedies,' and Mr. J. Bruce Wallace, M.A., on 'A Peaceful Revolution Possible Within Existing Laws.' All the writers have been studying the subject of unemployment for a long time, and have had face-to-face dealing with the facts of which they treat.

From Mr. John Murray.—'Railways and their Rates,' by Edwin A. Pratt. Railway companies are rightly or wrongly the objects of much severe criticism; it is an opinion very generally held among traders that, by the imposition of excessive and unreasonable rates, railway companies are more or less strangling our chief industries. The public has many voices, but the railways have none. For this reason Mr. Pratt has wisely stepped forward to present the other side of the question, and he begs the reader 'to consider the case for the defence' before passing judgment. He places facts not generally known before the man in the street, who has now the opportunity of learning much that is probably new to him regarding the origin, legislative control, and financial position of British railways. Continental railways are compared with our own in a thoroughly practical manner, and there is an Appendix dealing with the British Canal Problem. There are included in the volume illustrations and an index.

From Mr. Eveleigh Nash.—'The Fall of Tzardom,' by Carl Joubert. Readers of the previous two books by this author will know exactly what style to expect. It is jerky in the extreme. There is no connection between the chapters, and the whole is so obviously coloured by the author's belief that there is nothing good in official Russia that only those readers who already agree with him would dare to accept his impressions or opinions as trustworthy. There may be, for ought we know, nothing but truth in the incredible tales he relates; but the author does not write in the style of truth, but in that of a biassed and not very critical partisan.

From Messrs. W. P. Nimmo, Hay & Mitchell, Edinburgh.—'Chadda in the Woodlands,' by Ellen Palmer. The facts of natural history, with a considerable flavouring of religious reflection, are pleasantly set forth by the authoress in this story of Chadda's country experiences. Chadda is a boy, not a girl as some might suppose, and we suspect that he surveys Nature's ways rather more in conformity with the wishes of his originator (who is ever ready to point a moral from his childish actions) than according to the uninspired dictates of his disposition. But the book has a thoroughly agreeable healthy tone, and, if not precisely stimulating, may be relied upon to interest young readers.

From Messrs. S. W. Partridge & Co.—'Great Evangelists,' by Jesse Page, F.R.G.S. Mr. Page does not seem to have had any very definite purpose in view in writing these sketches of living and dead evangelists. He has not drawn recognisable portraits of any of the men with whom he deals, and his style is always amateurish and occasionally slipshod. He has little discrimination or sense of proportion, and only a blind enthusiast could read his pages without irritation.

From Messrs. G. P. Putnam's Sons.—'Man's Responsibility,' by Thomas G. Carson. Mr. Carson's alternative title is 'How and Why the Almighty Introduced Evil upon the Earth.' The author acknowledges that the existence of evil 'has occupied the attention of men in all ages, and has been pronounced unaccountable'; still, he hopes 'that this great question may receive its solution in the following pages.' After reading his book we are dissatisfied with his answer to the riddle, though we are willing to confess that we have derived much interesting information from his attempt to solve it. His style lacks dignity and strength. Mr. Carson occupies himself too much with the obvious; this is surprising, as there can be no doubt he has read widely in philosophy and science.

From the Religious Tract Society.—'The Bible and Babylon: their Relationship in the History of Culture,' by Eduard König, D.D., Ph.D. Translated from the tenth German edition, with additional notes by the author and by the translator, the Rev. William Turnbull Pilter. The Preface to this volume, contributed by the Dean of Canterbury, thoroughly reveals its highly theological character and the laborious nature of the work undertaken by Mr. Pilter in translating so important a treatise. Briefly, certain writers in Germany, of whom Professor Friedrich Delitzsch is the most conspicuous, have hastily drawn the conclusion that because the Scriptural narratives and the divine revelations are closely connected with Babylonian narratives and Babylonian civilisation, they must have been derived from them, or, in epigrammatic phrase, 'that Babel is the real source of the Bible.' It is to the contravention of this argument that Professor König closely devotes himself, and he very conclusively shows that it has no substantial foundation.

From the Walter Scott Publishing Co., Ltd.—'Horatio Nelson: England's Sailor Hero,' by Richard H. Holme. A popular 'Life' of Nelson, simply but vigorously written, and issued at a moderate price, is clearly a necessity in this centenary year of the famous naval commander's most notable exploit, and this necessity Mr. Holmes's volume very efficiently supplies. He has obviously brought a large amount of enthusiasm to his work, and as a consequence the more heroic episodes in Nelson's career, which chiefly appeal to the general public, are glowingly described, and should in themselves ensure the perfect success of the book. Notably is this the case with the closing events in the great sailor's life, and the Battle of Trafalgar is presented in a word picture which fires the imagination and causes the scene to come vividly before the eye. The circumstances attaching to Lady Hamilton's connection with Lord Nelson are scarcely so happily described. The estimate of her character is vague and unsatisfying, and perhaps it would have been as well to reduce this portion of the book. But in his general treatment, looking at the matter from the popular point of view, Mr. Holme has admirably succeeded, and in lively, vivacious manner he will undoubtedly carry his readers with him from Preface to concluding chapter. The volume is embellished with a number of illustrations, among which are three portraits not hitherto published—two of Nelson and one of Lady Hamilton, by Johann Heinrich Schmidt, which have recently been discovered at Dresden. They have the attraction of novelty, but in respect of Lady Hamilton at least can scarcely be pronounced remarkable. There is also a fourth new portrait of some interest—namely, a likeness of the great sailor in the possession of F. T. Meehan, of Bristol. The book, taken as a whole, is one of great interest, and should splendidly fulfil the object with which it is published.

From Messrs. Anthony Treherne & Co., Ltd.—'The Waistcoat Pocket Shakespeare,' a series of miniature, exceptionally well printed volumes, each containing a separate play by the immortal bard, has recently been enriched by the addition of 'Love's Labour's Lost,' 'The Two Gentlemen of Verona,' 'Antony and Cleopatra,' and 'All's Well that Ends Well.' We understand that the publishers, in view of the increased demand, have decided to issue the remaining volumes of the edition at the rate of five volumes per month, completing the edition of forty volumes by September 30.

From Messrs. Ward, Lock & Co., Ltd.—'The Yellow Wave,' by M. P. Sheil. The employment of a capital letter with a dash to name some of the leading personages in this story lends it an air of reality which may be found attractive, especially when it is added that the author describes many events in the Russo-Japanese war which have not yet taken place. The influence on recent events of a secret society called the 'Tiger Hunters' would seem to be paramount, and the destinies of Asia, and of the nations of the nations of Europe, would appear to lie in the hollow of Baron M——'s hand. The secret marriage of his son Yoshio with Nadine, the daughter of the Russian general, Prince Devriloff, is the means of bringing peace, and the salvation, for the time being at least, of the white man, who, however, is doomed to succumb to his yellow brother somewhen or other. The love story, and the vain attempt of the husband and wife to find each other, become a little tiresome, although the end of the lovers is pathetic and well told, but it gives occasion for some excellent descriptions of fighting by land and sea. The book is well worth reading.

From Messrs. Williams & Norgate.—'The Coming Church,' by the Rev. John Hunter, D.D. Breadth and tolerance are becoming more popular day by day, and we heartily welcome any effort on the part of ministers of religion to meet a great section of the public half way in the distance which divides them. Dr. Hunter has written an able essay which is an eloquent plea for a Church simply Christian; he is not likely to live to see his hopes fulfilled, but he will have the satisfaction of knowing that he has done something towards widening the outlook of the average orthodox Christian.

NEW EDITIONS.—Messrs. George Bell & Son have published an exceptionally neat edition, beautifully printed and daintily bound, of Coventry Patmore's 'The Angel in the House,' a work that all readers possessing any pretentions to literary taste should be acquainted with.—The 'Poems of Thomas Gray and William Collins,' in one volume, have been added by Messrs. George Newnes, Ltd., to their well produced series of 'Pocket Classics.'

We have been favoured by the Astolat Press with a copy of their well-printed and tastefully gotten up souvenir for the Trafalgar Year in the shape of that portion of Robert Southey's 'Life of Nelson' relative to the memorable naval battle and last hours of the brave Admiral.

From Messrs. W. Blackwood & Sons we have received the second part of M. B. Synge's 'The World's Childhood,' being stories of the Greek gods and heroes simply told for young children.

Messrs. Smith, Elder & Co. have favoured us with a copy of their cheap edition of 'The White Company,' by A. Conan Doyle, forming the newest volume in their excellent 'Waterloo Library' of popular authors.

PUBLICATIONS OF THE WEEK.

WITH AN INDEX OF AUTHORS, TITLES, AND SUBJECTS OF BOOKS IN ONE ALPHABET.

All books are in cloth when not otherwise described. When the word 'net' is printed against the price of a book it means that there is not the usual trade allowance. The words of the Index which are printed in italics refer to the name under which the title of a work appears in larger type. Publishers who observe the omission of a book from the list will confer a favour by sending a copy of the title to the office for insertion in the next number.

⁂ In addition to the names of book sizes, such as cr. 8vo., royal 8vo., &c., the sizes are also given where possible in inches: inch=2½ centimètres.

BOOKS WANTED

REGULATIONS.

1. BOOKS IN PRINT ARE NOT ADVERTISED FOR, but can only appear in the ordinary Column advertisements and at the usual scale rate. Every care is taken to prevent this rule from being infringed; but we cannot hold ourselves in any way responsible for occasional oversights. Subscribers are requested to make careful inquiry at the Publishers' before sending their lists for these Columns.

2. Collective advertisements are not admissible, except in the case of very old subjects, where it may naturally be supposed the Advertisers have a difficulty in obtaining the titles.

3. All lists should be sent to the Office, addressed to the 'Manager of the Publishers' Circular,' as early in the week as possible, and in no case later than Wednesday morning. Advertisements received too late for one issue (i.e., on Thursday) are not inserted in the next unless express instructions to this effect are given. This is to avoid any misunderstanding arising from charging for extra lines.

4. Every Annual Subscriber has the privilege of an Advertisement of four titles free each week in these columns, and can have extra titles at 3d. per title prepaid. For Non-Subscribers a uniform rate of 3d. per title prepaid is charged, the name and address being counted as one title.

5. The Proprietors reserve to themselves the right of refusing any Advertisement.

SSOT'S OLD TESTAMENT.

IN TWO VOLUMES.

Large 4to. cloth extra, £6 6s. net.

NOTE.—Following on the extraordinary success obtained by the publication of 'THE LIFE OF OUR LORD JESUS CHRIST,' M. Tissot desired, as the crowning work of his life, to add to the 'New Testament' Illustrations a series on the 'Old Testament,' and in this manner to supply illustrations which cover the whole period of the Bible history. This work, of surpassing interest to all students of the Bible story, contains nearly Four Hundred illustrations from M. J. James Tissot's original drawings. A large proportion of these are faithful reproductions in colour from the original drawings. The letterpress is in English only.

'M. Tissot's scheme of colour, with its bright, barbarous touches in raiment and furniture, is no less telling than the accomplishment of his drawing.'—Scotsman.

'There are few men of modern times who have so well depicted the deep and solemn purport of the Bible story.'—Pall Mall Gazette.

TISSOT'S LIFE OF OUR LORD JESUS CHRIST.

DEAN & SON'S LIST

Lohengrin
BERNARD CAPES
Lohengrin

New Romances from Wagner's Operas.

It is a remarkable thing how ignorant even genuinely musical people are of the plots of their favourite operas. Ask any of your Wagner-loving friends to tell you the story of Tannhäuser, Lohengrin, not to speak of the 'Ring,' and probably not more than one in fifty will be able to tell you the details of the plots of these operas, even when they are familiar with every note of the music. Hence the raison d'être of these works, which are novelised versions of Wagner's grand plots, and of permanent value to English literature.

Ready Immediately.

LOHENGRIN.

By BERNARD CAPES. Illustrated by SARCADI-POGANY.

THE VALKYRIES.

By E. F. BENSON. Illustrated by T. NOYES LEWIS.

The Times: 'A thousand times more likely to do Wagner service than all the guide-books and key-books in the world.'

SIEGFRIED.

By BARING-GOULD. Illustrated by CHARLES ROBINSON.

The above volumes are handsomely bound in art linen, blocked in silver and gold. Large post 8vo. Illustrated. 6s.

MY LADY LAUGHTER.

By DWIGHT TILTON.

A Romance of Boston Town in the Days of the Great Siege.

Included among its characters are George Washington, John Hancock, Samuel Adams, Joseph Warren, Paul Revere, and many others who fought to save Boston in 1775.

Pall Mall Gazette: 'A charming heroine adorns the pages of this romance. . . . The illustrations, which are in colour, constitute one attraction of the many the volume possesses.'

Scotsman: 'This is a brisk and entertaining historical romance of fighting and love-making. . . . The main concern of the book is with a love affair which idealises the character of a merry and beautiful woman. . . . She is also visually shown in the striking coloured illustrations with which the book is adorned. . . . The book should be heartily enjoyed by every reader who likes romance.'

WITH OVER 400 ILLUSTRATIONS.

IN TWO VOLUMES.

Large 4to. cloth extra, £6 6s. net.

NOTE.—Following on the extraordinary success obtained by the publication of 'THE LIFE OF OUR LORD JESUS CHRIST,' M. Tissot desired, as the crowning work of his life, to add to the 'New Testament' Illustrations a series on the 'Old Testament,' and in this manner to supply illustrations which cover the whole period of the Bible history. This work, of surpassing interest to all students of the Bible story, contains nearly Four Hundred illustrations from M. J. James Tissot's original drawings. A large proportion of these are faithful reproductions in colour from the original drawings. The letterpress is in English only.

'M. Tissot's scheme of colour, with its bright, barbarous touches in raiment and furniture, is no less telling than the accomplishment of his drawing.'—Scotsman.

BOOKSELLERS' ASSOCIATIONS, PAST AND PRESENT.*

To Mr. Robert Bowes, of Cambridge, booksellers owe much useful information in connection with book trade matters, and he has again put them under an obligation to him by compiling a volume on 'Booksellers' Associations, Past and Present'—intended for the use of the trade only. In his Preface Mr. Bowes tells us that his little work is based on an old volume of newspaper cuttings, and other matters, relating to the Booksellers' Association, which was put an end to—for it did not expire naturally—in 1852; this collection was made or belongs to one of Mr. Bowes's friends who was actually engaged in the various negotiations which took place in that year.

After briefly describing the rise and progress of the existing Association, the subject of 'Trade Organisation in the Past' is dealt with, and forms the bulk of the booklet—some 44 out of 54 pages.

In 1834 the booksellers of Glasgow held a meeting which resulted in the formation of 'The Glasgow Booksellers' Protection Association.' Rules were made under which its members bound themselves not to give the public more than 10 per cent. discount on 'the latest edition of copyright books,' and not to have any dealings in copyright books with any retail or wholesale booksellers who refused to concur with them. In order to let the members know when a bookseller was accused of breaking their regulations the committee adopted a canny method; they sent out a list of members with his name left out—a sort of judgment by omission. But the effect was exactly the same as if the delinquent's name had been given—he was, so to speak, 'sent to Coventry.' The Association appears to have carried out its objects successfully for eight years, when a disaffected bookseller, Mr. John Joseph Griffin, acted up to his name and gave the Glasgow booksellers an awful 'skeer.' He published a pamphlet in which he showed that 'all the members of the Association, including her Majesty's Bookseller, her Majesty's Printer, two Bailies, the Lord Provost, and many Elders of the Kirk, were liable to be transported beyond the seas for a term of seven years for illegal conspiracy.'

As more than a hundred of Glasgow's most respectable citizens were placed in what Mr. Griffin rightly rubbed in as being 'this awful predicament,' the Association took fright and counsel's opinion—asking if they were breaking the law, and, if so, how they could do it without fear of of Botany Bay. Counsel told them it was illegal to combine to do what they were doing, and that they were not prepared to suggest how the same result could be attained and the penalties avoided—or words to that effect.

We gather from internal evidence that Mr. Bowes's friend, who collected the press cuttings, was one of the threatened hundred, for the next item is a copy of the 'London Booksellers' Resolutions,' evidently supplied at the request of the Glasgow Association for the purpose of comparison. The resolutions of the London trade doubtless led to those put in force in Glasgow in 1836. On November 3, 1829, some members of the London wholesale and retail bookselling trade met, formed themselves into a committee, called a general meeting of the trade, which was held at the Chapter Coffee House in December 1829, and passed resolutions against the underselling of copyright books, allowing only 10 per cent. discount for cash, and ruling that reading societies, book clubs, and literary institutions should in no case be allowed more than 15 per cent. This Association, a sort of indirect successor of one established in London in 1812, apparently carried out its objects successfully from January 1, 1830, for nearly twenty years. Probably Mr. Griffin's successful attack on the Glasgow Association, which brought it to an end in 1845, led also to the dissolution of the older London body. In 1849 a bookseller who had systematically disregarded the rules of the Association was called to book by the Committee, but without effect; doubtless the delinquent was fortified by the success of the Scottish undersellers. The result was more stringent regulations, a 'Declaration,' and a 'New Trade Ticket.' On July 23, 1850, Mr. Sampson Low, secretary of the Committee of the Booksellers' Association, appointed at a meeting held on July 12, 1850, at Exeter Hall, sent out a notice stating that the 'Declaration' was ready for signature at his office, 169 Fleet Street.

It would take up too much space and be unfair to Mr. Bowes if we re-told here the not unknown but too often forgotten story of the agitation caused by that 'Declaration' and 'New Ticket.' It is very interesting to note how the London booksellers of half-a-century ago worked and fought for their interests. The leader of the malcontents, John Chapman, was, like Mr. Griffin, a bookseller. He attacked the London Association in the Westminster Review, of which he was editor and proprietor. The opposition spread. On March 30, 1852, the Times launched a thunderbolt against what it called 'an insupportable system,' other papers joined in, meetings of authors were held, and finally the Booksellers' Association, wisely seeing that it was useless to fight against the public feeling which had been unfairly aroused, said they would submit their position to the opinion of Lord Campbell, Dr. Millman, and Mr. Grote, and pledged themselves to abide by their decision. This being adverse, the Association, as a protective body, dissolved.

Time has proved that the booksellers and publishers of 1850 were right, and has justified the remark of Mr. Effingham Wilson, who, in seconding a vote of thanks given by the retail booksellers to Mr. W. Longman, Mr. John Murray, and other gentlemen for so ably advocating the interests of the bookselling trade, said he 'demurred entirely to Lord Campbell's judgment. What did Lord Campbell, or Mr. Grote, or Dr. Millman, or even the Times newspaper, know about the practical operation of the bookselling trade? For his part he thought the booksellers were quite competent to conduct their own affairs.'

Other matters referred to very briefly in Mr. Bowes's work are the fight made against such 'Taxes on Knowledge' as paper duties (Charles Knight proved that the paper duty, advertisement tax, &c., equalled 16 per cent. of the cost of production), free copies to National Libraries (it seems that we owe the reduction of copies from eleven to five to the exertions of Mr. Silk Buckingham, who ought to have a monument); and, finally, admirable arguments against underselling from the speech of Mr. Murray before Lord Campbell's Committee, and in a letter from Mr. Alexander Macmillan to Mr. Gladstone dated April 10, 1868.

BOOK-TRADE INTERESTS AND THE TIMES.

UNLESS rumour is entirely at fault the booksellers of the United Kingdom will find soon that a great deal of the money of the book-buying public instead of passing—as it should by natural right do—through the booksellers, will go direct to the Times, which is arranging to supply books on any and every subject to anybody who will agree to buy the Times at a premium.

The Times used to be a great national institution of which even its political enemies were proud; why should it thus ruthlessly drive—like some Juggernaut car—over the members of an honourable trade who throughout the whole country for more than a century have helped to make its fortunes.

In the name of Justice we ask the Thunderer to hesitate before it launches this new thunderbolt at an honourable, ancient, and not wealthy body of its fellow countrymen, and at any rate to let the booksellers in some way benefit by the new scheme.

We understand that a special meeting of the Council of the Publishers' Association has been summoned for next week to consider and discuss the proposals brought forward by the Times for a bookselling establishment.

NOTES AND ANNOUNCEMENTS.

'A Publisher's Confession,' which we noticed last week, is, we learn, to be published next week by Messrs. Gay & Bird in an edition at 2*s.* net. By the way, we gave the price of the American edition as 20 cents; we should have said 60 cents.

Messrs. J. M. Dent & Co. announce Volumes 16 and 17 of their edition of the complete works of Leo Tolstoy, as edited and translated by Professor Wiener, of Harvard. Volume 16 contains 'My Religion,' 'On Life,' 'Thoughts on God,' and 'On the Meaning of Life'; and Volume 17 contains 'What Shall We Do Then?' 'On the Moscow Census,' some Collected Articles, and some Popular Legends.

Messrs. Sampson Low, Marston & Co., Ltd., are re-issuing an official book on Norway, which contains authentic information about all the political affairs which have led to the present crisis in that country, including history, international position, political constitution, and administration, judicial organisation, social conditions, &c. &c.

A new volume will shortly be published by Messrs. J. Baker & Son, of Clifton, entitled 'Thoughts Transcendental and Practical,' by Miss C. Sturge.

Mr. J. W. Arrowsmith, of Bristol, has published a well-produced, well-printed sixpenny edition of Mr. F. Anstey's 'Time Bargain.'

Messrs. Newnes send us a most attractive sixpenny edition of Mr. Henry Harland's slight but charming story, 'The Lady Paramount.'

Doubtless many of our readers want to copy letters written with their stylographic pens. If they have not been able to find a satisfactory ink, we can advise them to try Hyde's Fountain Copying Ink, which is much the most satisfactory we have been able to find—it runs freely and copies well. It is made by Messrs. Hyde, St. Bride Street, New Bridge Street, London.

A catalogue of over 3,000 different books relating to the topography, antiquities, family history, genealogy, &c., of the British Isles comes to us from Messrs. Bailey Bros., 67 Newington Butts, London, S.E. In these days of wonders why cannot somebody invent duplicate souls? How useful it would be to be able to go anywhere and get information for oneself while still grinding at the headquarters. We see scores of items in secondhand and firsthand catalogues which we should like to see, but time and space and dross and other engagements get in the way.

A new volume of Australian poems is about to be published through Mr. Elliot Stock by Mr. W. H. K. Yarrington under the title 'Celestine, and other Verses.'

Mr. Effingham Wilson has published a fourth edition of 'The Solicitor's Clerk,' by Charles Jones. This very useful manual has been highly spoken of by the leading law journals, and will be found invaluable to those for whom it is intended.

The inclusion of a volume containing Peele's graceful comedy 'The Arraignment of Paris' in Messrs. J. M. Dent & Co.'s 'Temple Dramatists' is particularly appropriate, as the members of the Mermaid Society are to give a performance of this play during the University Extension Meeting at Oxford in August. Messrs. Dent expect to have the book ready in a fortnight's time.

The Bookman says: Mr. J. A. Steuart has completed a new novel, dealing with the fortunes of Montrose. It will be published early in autumn under the title 'The Red Reaper.'

Next week Mr. Eveleigh Nash will publish a new book entitled 'An Eye-Witness in Manchuria,' by Lord Brooke, who was Reuter's Special Correspondent in Manchuria.

The July number of the the British Empire Review (the official organ of the British Empire League) contains an article on 'Australian Affairs' by the Hon. Sir John Cockburn. There also appears a very interesting and instructive address on India, delivered at Balcombe on June 2 by Major-General Sir Edwin Collen, G.C.I.E., C.B., who, in his remarks upon the government and administration of the vast continent, says: 'Lord Kitchener's view is that he should not only command the army, but that everything should be in his hands—the purse, administration, and policy. I think this would be a misfortune, that the labour is now well divided, and that it would not be in the interests of the native army and the security of India to place all power and an overwhelming amount of work in the hands of one man, however able. But I believe that it will be quite possible to arrange matters so that any defects in the present system, which has lasted a great number of years, can be remedied without destroying it.'

The author of 'Some Remarkson Time Allowances for Racing Yachts' (Sampson Low & Co.) has, from the many detailed and careful reports of yacht races which are to hand, tried to formulate more correct laws for the speeds of yachts. He has from this starting-point tried to reduce in a rational way a measuring rule. He shows how his formula might easily be arrived at by altering some few details in the famous English formula introduced by the late Dixon Kemp; and as the new formula apparently solves a considerably part of the scantling problems, it seems at the same time to satisfy the demands recently put forth by French yachtsmen.

Mr. Werner Laurie will publish early this month a new novel by Florence Warden entitled 'Playing the Knave.' Mr. Laurie says: 'It is probably the most sensational story of mystery, money, and murder the author of "The House on the Marsh" has ever written. The scene is laid in an old English country house and the adjoining chapel, and the motor-car plays a prominent part in the story.'

Mr. Henry Haynie, an Anglo-American journalist long resident in Paris, has written an interesting and chatty volume of autobiography, entitled 'The Captains and the Kings: Intimate Reminiscences of Notabilities,' which will be published by Mr. Werner Laurie.

Is it not a mistake for literary papers to give lists of 'The Best Selling Books' week by week, or month by month? It is unfairly handicapping the books which are best for worthier reasons.

Kritik der Kritik is the title of a new German monthly journal to commence in September. The object of the new venture is to expose spurious criticism and all unfair, ignorant, dictatorial and pretentious critics, and to give all good artists a fair chance; in fact, artists are invited to criticise their own productions under certain conditions, and to explain their methods and objects. Log-rolling by cliques is to be spiked, and on the other hand the critics who stifle artists by ignoring and sitting on them are to get beans. Particulars of this new art broom can be had of the Publisher, Herr S. Schottlaender, Schlesische Verlagsanstalt, Breslau.

The higher the collar the smaller the brain. That a stiff high collar may press against the pneumogastric, or vagus, nerve to such a degree as to cause serious symptoms, such as loss of strength, neuralgic pains, nausea, and even anæsthesia, is the belief of Dr. F. B. Brubaker, as stated in the Medical Mirror. People who habitually wear high collars without experiencing any of these ill effects may be surprised to learn the harm that this seemingly innocent article of haberdashery can wreak.

That vampire of modern life, the 'Trust' system—'grab all' is its real name—has now attacked the Italian theatrical world.

'Maurice Jokai by Himself' is the title of an autography of the Hungarian novelist edited, with an Introduction, by Z. Beothy, to be published shortly at Budapest. Jokai wrote about 120 works.

Messrs. Chatto & Pickering, of 68 Haymarket, London, have some very interesting and rare items in their No. 139 Catalogue, including Bunyan, Burns, Chap Books, Charles I., and George Chapman. The Charles I. items number over four-hundred, and the single George Chapman item is priced at £300. It is a first edition (circa 1624) of Chapman's Homer, a presentation copy from Chapman to Henry Reynolds with a seventeen-line dedication in Chapman's own writing. There are also very interesting corrections by him in ink of his portrait on the engraved title pages, corrections by him in the text, &c.

AN IMPORTANT NEW WORK BY CAPTAIN A. T. MAHAN.

Messrs. Sampson Low, Marston & Co, Lim., will publish, in October next, a very important new work, by Captain A. T. Mahan, entitled 'Sea Power in its Relations to the War of 1812.' The work, which will be in two demy 8vo. volumes, with maps and many full-page plates, will probably be published at 36*s*. net.

In these highly important volumes the distinguished author continues his works upon 'The Influence of Sea Power upon History,' treating of a subject of special interest, to which he has brought the knowledge acquired in a lifetime of expert study, together with an exceptional command of Government and private documents; and in such vital matters as the impressment of American seamen and privateer records he has been able to make valuable additions to the world's knowledge. Captain Mahan presents in a series of vivid pictures the stirring events of the war, the points of single ship fights and squadron actions, giving due attention to the strategic interest of campaigns on the land and the diplomacy of the time. His new work is a contribution to history of the greatest value. It is divided into the following chapters: 1. Antecedents and Causes of the War; 2. The Approach of War; 3. Early Cruises and Engagements: the 'Constitution' and 'Guerriere'; 4. Operations on the Northern Frontier after Hull's Surrender; 5. Naval Actions, 'Wasp' and 'Frolic,' 'United States' and 'Macedonian'; 6. The Winter of 1812-1813, Action between 'Constitution' and 'Java' &c.; 7. Lake Frontier Campaign of 1813; 8. The Battle of Lake Erie and Perry's Victory; 9. British Offensive Operations on the Coast, 1813-1814; 10. Maritime Operations External to the United States; 11. The Campaign of 1814.

THE MAZZINI CENTENARY.

Worshippers of the ideal who found May chiefly noteworthy because it rounded the first hundred years since the death of Schiller may find June mainly memorable as marking the first centennial of Mazzini's birth. A believer in the doctrine of metempsychosis might well be impressed with the fact that some six weeks after the German poet yielded up his breath the apostle of Italian unity became a living soul, and entered upon a life which was destined to be consecrated to the same lofty aims, and to be crowned with a fairer vision ere its close. And those to whom the transmigration of souls is but a baseless imagining may find in the coincidence an apt illustration of the old figure of the torch-bearers, each handing to his successor the sacred light of the truth that in the end must surely make man free.

Different as were the circumstances environing the lives of Schiller and Mazzini, different not only in their personal bearings, but also in all those broader aspects whereby the eighteenth century was separated from the nineteenth, we must recognise, nevertheless, that the two men were inspired by one and the same patriotic impulse, one and the same gospel of human brotherhood, one and the same austere ethics of devotion and self-sacrifice. Each in his own way all his life long fought the good fight; each was a true knight of the spirit in thought and deed; and the memory of each remains to us as a shining example of fortitude in adversity, of hopefulness in discouragement, and of faith in an ideal whose light was dimmed for duller visions by the sullen mists of cynicism, and indifferentism, and selfishness. All honour to these souls, and to all kindred souls, whose keen sight, purged as with euphrasy and rue, is fixed steadfastly upon goals too far set to be discerned by the commonalty, yet surely established as to the ultimate aims of human aspiration.

Mazzini was not without his meed of sympathy and fitting appreciation during his lifetime, and to few men have such tributes been paid as were bestowed upon him in his later years, and have continued to be bestowed, by the noblest spirits of the age since his death. 'All honour to thee, thou noble Mazzini,' said Clough, writing from Rome in the last days of the Triumvirate, 'when from Janiculan heights thundered the cannon of France.' Carlyle, usually grudging of praise, called him 'a man of genius and virtue, a man of sterling veracity, humanity, and nobleness of mind.' The Master of Balliol said of him that 'he had a genius beyond that of most ordinary statesmen,' and Mr. John Morley pronounced him 'probably the highest moral genius of the century.' Imaginative writers, too, have glorified him in verse and prose: he is exalted in Mr. Meredith's 'Vittoria,' and Mr. Swinburne has constituted himself his panegyrist-in-chief.

The message of Mazzini, like the message of Schiller, is one of which our own age is peculiarly in need. Divested of its temporal accidents, it stands revealed as the quintessence of Christian ethics, restated in the terms of modern social conditions. It is summed up in one pregnant phrase, the duties of man, not conflicting with but merely complementing that other phrase, the rights of man, to which the French Revolution gave such ringing utterance. Here is the doctrine, embodied in a definition of the religious idea:

'That idea elevates and purifies the individual; dries up the springs of egotism, by changing, and removing outside himself the centre of activity. It creates for man that theory of duty which is the mother of self-sacrifice, which ever was, and ever will be, the inspirer of great and noble things; a sublime theory that draws man near to God, borrows from the divine nature a spark of omnipotence, crosses at one leap all obstacles, makes the martyr's scaffold a ladder to victory, and is as superior to the narrow, imperfect theory of rights as the law is superior to one of its corollaries.'

'Mine is not the work of a writer,' he said in 'Faith and the Future,' 'it is the stern and fearless mission of an apostle.'

HOW STEVENSON LOOKED.

In Mrs. Robert Louis Stevenson's introduction to 'Prince Otto,' in the new Biographical Edition of her husband's works, she speaks of the extraordinary effect of Stevenson's personality on the imagination and even on the memories of the people he met. And she explains the remarkable legends that have grown up about his appearance by saying:—

'It never seemed to me that either my husband or Robert Alan Stevenson quite belonged to their century. In some indefinable way they differed in appearance from the majority of mankind as much as they differed in character. This is the only explanation I can find for the singular descriptions of my husband's habiliments that have gained general credence. He looked as though he would naturally be clad in something picturesque and unusual, having a gallant bearing with an alert grace of movement that is seldom seen except in half-civilised countries. He used many gestures in speaking, was of a dark, ruddy complexion, and quick and fiery of temper. "Something royal, ain't it?" was the audible comment of a negro waiter on a Newport boat. I imagine even this negro waiter had a picture in his mind of sashes and cloaks, and jewelled stilettos; whereas the supposedly royal personage was clad in ordinary blue serge.

'It is strange how such tales take hold of the imagination and grow with the telling. Within the last few months a man said to me: "I knew Mr. Stevenson well in Manasquan. I can see him now, in my mind's eye, just as he looked in his nankin pants and red sash!" In a recent, otherwise excellent, article the author speaks of "Stevenson's intolerable affectation in dress." There was more excuse for the captain of a passenger ship. "Mr. Stevenson," he said, "came aboard my vessel in his cowboy rig, with his long boots on." The truth being that my husband rode to the wharf on horseback in conventional riding costume.'

MR. SIMMS AND MESSRS. PICKERING OF BATH.

Mr. Simms of Bath has purchased from the trustees the old-established book business of Messrs. G. & F. Pickering of that city, and intends, after structural alterations, to carry it on in connection with the well-known business in George Street. This business is probably the oldest bookselling business in England—i.e. that has been kept in the hands of one family, the present owner, Mr. Alfred Simms, having succeeded his father and grandfather, the latter of whom opened it in the year 1800.

The following verses were written by a talented member of the Punch staff in 1900 to commemorate the hundredth anniversary:

In the dim dawning of the Century,
When Thackeray and Dickens were unborn,
When by that undistinguished poet, Pye,
The Wreath* was worn.

Yes, even then the connoisseur, who sought
To keep abreast of literary whims,
The last production of the moment bought
From Mr. Simms.

Strangely unreal they seem, those early days;
Poets and Novelists have come—and gone,
But still 'The Business,' in the common phrase,
'Is carried on;'

And still the Purchaser who loves a book,
Whether it be prose, poetry, or hymns,
Now, as a century ago, can look
To Mr. Simms!

* The Poet Laureate's wreath. Pye was succeeded by Southey in 1813.

[Since Mr. Simms, without any bickering,
Has bought up the business of Messrs. Pickering,
We trust that he, and his son, and his son's sons
Will continue to flourish on Bath and its Bun Buns.

'PUNCH' IN THE LAW COURTS.

'TOBY, M.P.,' SUED FOR ALLEGED LIBEL.

SEQUEL TO A BOOK REVIEW.

(From the Daily Mail.)

Toby, M.P., of Punch, who is equally well known to the public by his real name of H. W. Lucy, appeared in Mr. Justice Darling's Court on Tuesday as defendant in a libel action.

In addition to his Parliamentary diary, Mr. Lucy also writes some of the book reviews for Punch, and it was in connection with one of these, entitled 'Mangled Remains,' that he and the proprietors of the periodical in question were sued by Mr. Frederick Moy Thomas, the author of 'Fifty Years of Fleet Street, being the Life and Recollections of Sir John Robinson.' Mr. Lucy pleaded 'fair comment.'

Mr. Dickens, K.C., said that Mr. Thomas complained that he had been most grievously libelled by Mr. Lucy. It was a libel which reflected most seriously upon him as an author, and was calculated to do him injury with people connected with journalism.

The fact that it appeared in Punch made it more serious. As a rule, Punch treated subjects from the humorous point of view and in a good-natured manner, and therefore when one found a bitter, spiteful, and cruel article like this in its pages the contrast made a very great impression on the mind of the reader.

The Critique.

The review complained of read as follows:

'Been reading "Fifty Years of Fleet Street," just issued by Macmillans. Purports to be the life and recollections of Sir John Robinson, the man who made, and for a quarter of a century maintained at a high level, the Daily News.

'The story is written by Mr. Frederick Moy Thomas, who has added "a new terror to death."

'Like Don José, what he has said, he has said; his observations and written memoranda not being mixed up with what his biographer thought he meant and uttered.

'Mr. Thomas goes about the biographer's business in fresh fashion, complacently announcing, by way of introduction to the volume, "I have not thought it necessary or desirable to indicate what is his (Sir John's) and what is my own.

'"If there is anything amusing or entertaining in these pages, I am quite content that my very old friend and chief should have the credit of it. The dulness I take upon myself." Here be generosity! Here be magnanimity!

'When he does let the hapless subject speak for himself, he is relegated to smaller type.

'For the rest it is Mr. Thomas as loquitur or telling poor Robinson's cherished stories as if they were his own, sometimes with heavy hand brushing off the bloom.

'Even in these depressing circumstances there is no mistaking Robinson's high level of humour, his gift of graphic characterisation. The worst of it is that, happening in the very same page upon some banal remark, some pompous platitude, the alarmed reader, recognising Mr. Thomas, hastily turns over half a dozen pages and possibly misses a handful of the genuine ore.

'Happily the material is so good, its original literary form so excellent, that even this unparalleled atrocity cannot quite spoil the book.'

Regard for Sir John's Memory.

Mr. Thomas, counsel set forth, was peculiarly adapted to write Sir John Robinson's biography. He had endeavoured to do so not only to the best of his ability as an honest journalist, but with the tenderest possible regard to Sir John's memory, and it was because Mr. Lucy had thought fit to attribute to him motives which never entered his mind and suggested that he had cast a slur upon the memory of Sir John that Mr. Thomas felt this libel most acutely.

The relations between Mr. Thomas and Mr. Lucy were not of the best. How or why this estrangement originated it was difficult to say, but there was no love lost between them. In spite of the fact that both had been for years on the Daily News they did not speak.

The tenor of Mr. Lucy's article in Punch suggested that Mr. Thomas was an incompetent ass.

He also suggested without the slightest foundation that Mr. Thomas had abundant and splendid material for his work, and that with this material in his hands Mr. Thomas, in order to glorify himself and set himself before the public as an author of eminence, had taken Sir John Robinson's matter and stories, and put them before the public as his own.

'When the poor man speaks for himself he puts himself in smaller type,' was one of Mr. Lucy's complaints, but the smaller type was merely used for the purpose of discriminating between what was the writer's and what was Sir John's.

The book had the approval of the members of Sir John's family, and the reviews in other papers were at least fair.

The case was adjourned to next day.

In resuming the case on Wednesday, Mr. Dickens, K.C., in asking for substantial but not vindictive damages for Mr. Thomas, submitted that the title of the article, 'Mangled Remains,' could only mean that the memoranda left by Sir John Robinson had been wilfully mutilated so that the biographer could belittle his old chief and set himself on a pedestral.

The Editorial 'We.'

Referring to Mr. Lucy's criticism that Mr. Thomas 'more than once airily alludes to 'our diary' and 'our notes,"' Mr. Dickens angrily observed that this was a grossly unfair and pitifully spiteful reflection upon the use of the editorial 'we.'

When the review appeared Mr. Lucy sent a postcard to the publishers of the book, 'You will see a notice of "Fifty Years in Fleet Street," in this week's Punch, but I don't think you will like it.' (Laughter.)

Mr. Dickens said that Mr. Thomas wrote to Punch saying he would be satisfied if Mr. Lucy withdrew all imputations and apologised, but Sir Francis Burnand replied that Mr. Thomas's tone was dictatorial, and asked, 'Are you editing Punch or am I?'

Mr. Thomas then went into the witness box and said he called himself the compiler and editor of 'Fifty Years in Fleet Street.'

He and Mr. Lucy had been attached to the Daily News together for some twenty-three years, but as Mr. Lucy's manner towards him had always been cool and supercilious he did not like him.

Mr. Thomas added that he had used everything of Sir John's which was in a substantial literary form as it stood.

Mr. Birrell, K.C., then rose to cross-examine, and elicited the fact that the offending article had been eliminated from the volumes of 'Punch.'

Mr. Thomas admitted that if Mr. Lucy thought the book a very bad one he was entitled to say so. He did not object to honest criticism.

In some cases he had mixed up his recollections with Sir John's materials, as stated in the Preface, but he did not consider that a novel method for the compiler of such a work to adopt.

Mr. Lucy's Evidence.

His lordship having decided not to withdraw the case from the jury, Mr. Lucy went into the witness box.

He said he had been connected with journalism for thirty-two or thirty-three years. His primary object in writing the review was to pay a tribute to his old friend Robinson, and a secondary object was to 'give a lift to a struggling journalist.'

He was perfectly unaware of any ill-feeling towards Mr. Thomas, who was 'not in his sphere, and was wholly indifferent to him.'

Cross-examined by Mr. Dickens: He did not use the expression 'struggling journalist' disparagingly. He was not aware that Mr. Thomas had been assistant editor of the Daily News. He withdrew the expression.

You regret having used it?—Yes.

Mr. Birrell: All journalists struggle?—They do.

You are a struggling journalist?—I was.

When did you leave off struggling?—Last night.

Mr. Birrell then summed up Mr. Lucy's case to the jury. He said that although this was an age of swelled heads, thin skins, and mealy mouths, he was amazed that even a member of the notoriously irritable class of authors should come into court with such a complaint. It was impossible to write a review for Punch with a lawyer at one's elbow.

Surely the jury would not punish everyone who indulged in 'flights of fancy,' such as 'mangled remains.'

The Judge, in summing up, said that as to reviews of books the reviewer had a protection given him, and the more so, seeing that books were usually, as in this case, sent gratuitously to papers inviting criticism. Therefore if reviews were honestly and fairly done, they were protected.

His Lordship then proceeded to give the journalistic relations of Sir John Robinson, Mr. Thomas, and Mr. Lucy. His Lordship said he did not know whether his official position absolutely required him to be ignorant of a paper called Punch—(laughter)—but it was a journal which is, or affects to be, amusing, a comic paper giving itself up to real comedy, and conducting its criticism on the whole with remarkable good temper.

His Lordship said he did not himself remember actions against Punch for libel. There might have been some, but if so they were few and far between, and every week Punch dealt with things in a way which, if the criticism appeared elsewhere, would so annoy someone or other that it would lead to an action. As to the cover of the paper, he at least could confess that he knew it, as it had been put in evidence. (Laughter.) They would see on the cover a picture of Punch himself, and Punch had a dog named Toby. Mr. Lucy, taking the position of Punch's dog, got himself elected to Parliament, and there he barked impossible things under the title of 'Toby, M.P.' (Laughter.) His Lordship then detailed the beginning of the strained relations between Mr. Thomas, Mr. Lucy, and Sir John Robinson.

His Lordship quoted a passage from Goldsmith's Islington 'Mad Dog' and the Islington godly man:

> This dog and man at first were friends,
> But when a pique began,
> The dog, to gain some private ends,
> Went mad and bit the man.

His Lordship, in conclusion, dealt with the circumstances attending the writing of the review. He remarked that, unlike many dogs that came into court, 'Toby, M.P.' was not entitled to one bite. (Laughter.) He asked them to say if they thought that the criticism had been written in a spirit of fairness, or whether it was prompted by a desire to injure the plaintiff.

The jury found in favour of plaintiff and awarded £300 damages. Judgment was given accordingly.

MATCH BETWEEN CHAPMAN & HALL & GEORGE BELL & SONS.

Success again attended Messrs. Chapman & Hall in their annual encounter with Messrs. George Bell & Sons on Saturday last.

Although the latter were not up to their usual strength, great praise must be given to the bowling of Mr. Taylor, who obtained 4 wickets for 29 runs.

For the winning team Mr. Matz compiled a useful 23, but was unfortunately run out. Mr. C. H. Evans contributed a freely and powerfully played 48. The bowling honours go to Messrs. Dunnett and Moody, who took 4 wickets for 17 runs, and 5 wickets for 21 respectively.

THE PUBLISHERS' ASSOCIATION.

Mr. Sidney Appleton, of 25 Bedford Street, Covent Garden, has been elected a member of the Publishers' Association.

AN ACCOUNT OF THE ORIGINAL BODLEIAN COPY OF THE FIRST FOLIO OF SHAKESPEARE (1623).

By F. Madan, G. M. R. Turbutt, and S. Gibson.

An account is now ready of the Original Bodleian First Folio of Shakespeare, giving particulars of its chequered history before and after it left the Bodleian, of its rediscovery, and of its importance for Shakespearean criticism, together with a full description of the volume and its original unrestored binding, and notes on the Droeshout portrait and on the true order of the preliminary leaves. There are also seven collotype illustrations (the general appearance of the book, two portraits, the Bodleian Binding List of 1624, two inner covers, and a page exhibiting wear and tear). The size is folio, to range with the Clarendon Press Facsimile of the First Folio, issued in 1902. To be had only by application to F. Madan, Esq., Brasenose College, Oxford, price 5*s.* net, prepaid.

HOLIDAY HOT-WEATHER BOOKS.

In Messrs. Hatchards' 'Books of To-day and the Books of To-morrow' for July Arthur Pendenys writes to his 'Dear Belinda' as follows:

Dear Belinda,—A few hot days such as we have had lately and everyone begins to think of the sea or the moors. I myself am a real baby in my love of the sea. I think it so nice to paddle, and if someone will come and paddle with me I am really very happy indeed. On hot summer days in London I read with longing feelings the advertisements in the Daily Telegraph of hotels and lodgings by the sea, and most of all I read those thrilling paragraphs, filled with the concentrated essence of news, printed in the same journal under the heading 'By the Silver Sea'—which, however, one sometimes suspects should be placed among the advertisements. Mr. Walter Emanuel, who is read by everyone each week in the pages of Punch, has a most amusing parody in his new book, 'Only My Fun,' called 'By the Silly Sea.' 'Trouville: The weather here is brilliant, and hundreds of people during the past week have been bathing in glorious sunshine, but very little else.' 'Brighton: Some clergymen staying here, having noticed with disgust children running about on the beach, and altogether enjoying themselves, a children's service has been instituted.' 'Cromer: Two children were drowned here yesterday. This place is becoming more and more popular with fathers of large families.' 'Ilfracombe: Some haze rested on the water this morning, but really no one could blame it, the weather was so hot and tiring.' 'Blackpool: The heat is still intense. A Liverpool gentleman down here for a rest shot an organ-grinder to-day. This is the first murder of the season.' 'Southend: The local doctors have lately had to treat an enormous number of gentlemen for strained eyesight, caused by the sea receding so far. At low tide it is almost impossible to see the ladies paddling.' Mr. Emanuel, in his 'Note on British Wit,' which is attached as a Preface to 'Only My Fun,' speaks of the spread of wit and humour even to 'our serious journals.' There is scarcely a daily paper now which has not a humourist on its staff; some keep a stud of them, and make fun of everything, their particular game being the tragedies of the police courts. Mr. Emanuel is rather good at comic tragedy himself. One chapter in 'Only My Fun' is called 'Little Tragedies,' but they are of a very harmless kind. 'Pa,' asked the child, 'what is an autobiography?' 'A book, my son,' moaned the father (who had written one) 'that the public autobi, but won't. Now go to bed.'—The curate had just kissed the pretty housemaid: 'Oh! but, sir—and you a clergyman!' cried the housemaid. 'Ah, don't let's talk shop now,' said the curate.—'Oh! darling, such good news,' cried Mrs. Snob, running in to see Mrs. Tufthunter; 'you will be green with envy.' 'Well, what is it this time?' asked the rival anxiously. 'Why, my dear Clara has caught the Duchess' cold.'

As new holiday hot-weather books I would couple with 'Only My Fun' J. K. Jerome's book, 'Idle Ideas in 1905.'

TRADE CHANGES.

The firm of John Mackenzie & Son, carrying on business as booksellers at 43 Lothian Street, Edinburgh, has been dissolved, as at June 16, 1905, by mutual consent, by the retiral therefrom of the subscriber John Mackenzie, one of the partners.

The said business will continue to be carried on by the subscriber John Hunter Mackenzie, the sole remaining partner, on his own account under the same firm name of John Mackenzie & Son.

The said John Hunter Mackenzie is authorised to uplift all the debts due to, and he will discharge the whole debts and liabilities of, the firm.

Letters to the Editor

[We do not hold ourselves responsible for the opinions expressed by our Correspondents.]

MR. BROWNELL AS CRITIC.

Dear Sir,—In your issue of July 1 you print lengthy extracts from Mr. Brownell's article on Henry James, and you conclude: 'We hope that editors of some of our English reviews will make e note of a critic, &c. . . . What good reading his criticism of some of our modern English novelists would be!'

May I point out that Mr. Brownell has written on some of the masters of novel writing in nineteenth-century England in his 'Victorian Prose Masters,' published in England by my firm. I regret to say that neither editors, booksellers, or public showed any particular eagerness in welcoming the work of one of the most thoughtful and accomplished of living critics. Perhaps Mr. Brownell's present essay in un-appreciation may induce some readers to turn to his work in appreciation.

Faithfully,

57-59 Long Acre. Alfred Nutt.

[We confess that modern English novelists was too general an expression. We ought to have said, some 'immense sale' living novelists and story-tellers. We had not in mind Thackeray, Carlyle, George Eliot, Mathew Arnold, Ruskin, or even George Meredith (who happily is still with us). All the same, we are glad to know that Mr. Brownell has written a work on them entitled 'Victorian Prose Masters,' and have ordered a copy. Mr. Brownell has also, we see, written a work on 'French Art,' also published by Mr. Nutt.—Ed.]

A WEEKLY NEWSPAPER FOR THE BLIND.

Dear Sir,—We have been requested by a number of those interested in the blind to issue a weekly newspaper printed in Braille type, containing a summary of the chief events of the week, &c.

The cost of this paper will be one penny, by post threehalfpence, and will contain sixteen pages, royal 4to. interlined.

Please send this circular on to any friend, as we find it difficult to obtain names and addresses of those interested.

The Braille Printing and Publishing Co.

[Blindness is so terrible an infliction that we hope this attempt to provide a weekly newspaper for the blind may meet with the success it deserves.—Ed.]

ALL THE DIFFERENCE!

Dear Sir,—In the Publishers' Circular of July 1, under 'Publications of the Week,' you have inserted 'Bormann (E.)—Quintessence of the Shakespeare Sonnet. This ought to be 'Quintessence of the Shakespeare Secret.' If you will kindly attend to this I shall be obliged, as it entirely alters the sense. Thanking you in advance,

Yours faithfully,

A. Siegle.

From Mr. H. R. Allenson.—'The History and Life of the Reverend Doctor John Tauler of Strasbourg, with Twenty-Five of his Sermons.' Translated from the German by Susanna Winkworth; Preface by Charles Kingsley. Tauler is not so widely known in England as he deserves to be, but those who are acquainted with his life and work invariably become devoted and enthusiastic admirers; Mr. Allenson has rendered the public a great service in issuing this excellent edition—'the fulfilment of a desire long indulged in.' A modern edition of these choice illustrations of religious mysticism is now within the reach of many who could not purchase at the fancy prices hitherto asked; we do not doubt that many readers of first-class spiritual books will make a point of purchasing this cheap edition.

From Messrs. Geo. Bell & Sons.—'The Prose Works of Jonathan Swift, D.D.,' edited by Temple Scott. Volume VII.: 'Historical and Political Tracts—Irish.' This edition of Swift is now rapidly nearing its conclusion, only two more volumes being required to complete the work and it is possible to speak in the highest terms of its editing, printing, and all-round production. Mr. Scott has shown himself exceptionally well qualified for his post, and to his skill and judiciousness as a commentator no little of the success attending the edition is due. The present volume includes some of Swift's most characteristic trenchant writings, including the well-known 'Modest Proposal for Preventing the Children of Poor People from being a Burthen to their Parents or the Country,' in which the Dean, it will be remembered, satirically advocates that all the superfluous babes in Ireland should in future be used for eating purposes, and thus benefit their parents and the trade of the country. These tracts are mostly written after the fall of the Harley Administration, when Swift took up his permanent residence in Dublin, and they are all directed to show the miserable state of the Emerald Isle and the many injustices she suffered at the hands of England. In his interesting Introduction Mr. Scott particularly makes reference to the Dean's lack of imagination and the slight weight he attached to the emotional side of human nature. In taking up the cause of Ireland, it was his sense of justice that mainly actuated him rather than any passionate, deep-seated sympathy with the people. Therefore his cynicism sometimes repels rather than elicits the admiration of the reader.

From Messrs. Adam & Charles Black.—'The Glory of London,' by G. E. Mitton. The author has scarcely quite got into a child's stride in this volume of 'The Council History Readers,' and though he speaks in his Preface of the many interests attaching to the great Metropolis, and the best method of conveying them to the juvenile mind, it may not unreasonably be doubted whether he has altogether achieved his laudable object. A little more warmth of colouring would perhaps have better brought about the desired purpose. However, in colouring material, six of the full-page plates are by no means wanting, and there are also forty-eight illustrations in black and white which should attract young readers.

From the Cambridge University Press.—'Trees: a Handbook of Forest-Botany for the Woodlands and the Laboratory,' by H. Marshall Ward, Sc.D., F.R.S. Volume III.—Flowers and Inflorescences. Following up his previous volumes in the 'Cambridge Biological Series,' respectively dealing with 'Buds and Twigs' and 'Leaves,' Professor Ward now takes up a branch of his subject especially suited to summer study. One of the chief advantages of the book is its comparative freedom from technicalities. For the most part it is written in such clear, simple language as the most elementary of botanists can understand. Another feature is that in order to minimise the difficulties of the beginner when considering the willow group—admittedly an intricate study even for the expert, and infinitely worse when the collector finds only the staminate or the pistillate flowers available—a supplementary table of classification by characters derived from the staminate or from the pistillate flowers respectively is given in an Appendix. The work is admirably designed and most successfully carried out, while a large number of illustrations not only add to its interest, but greatly enhance its educational value.

From Messrs. Chatto & Windus.—'Baliol Garth,' by Algernon Gissing. The author is a careful and conscientious writer, and his work is always well worth perusal. In this story we are concerned with the relations between Baliol Garth, tutor to Ninian Osprey, and his pupil, and their relations with Mabel Calderwood. The latter was just on the point of marrying Ninian's father, and had she done so her money would have saved him from the discovery of his embezzlement and its punishment. Garth at first assists this marriage out of affection for his pupil, knowing the circumstances; but at the last moment, out of love for Mabel, he causes her father to interfere and stop the marriage. Later he marries Mabel himself; Ninian lives with them on a farm, compromises himself with and then marries a dairymaid; finally, the father is released from penal servitude, possessed with but one idea, to revenge himself on Garth, whom he considers a traitor. Garth is a philosopher and almost a poet, and the problems put before us, with such a character as the central figure, are interesting, though rather academic; we should like to see the same worked out with more human characters.

From Messrs. Archibald Constable & Co., Ltd.—'Gas Engine Design,' by Charles Edward Lucke, Ph.D. The purpose of this book is to present in a compact form those principles which underlie the design of gas engines, together with such data on the subject as seem reliable for the use of those engaged in building this kind of machinery and who are familiar with its characteristics. The qualitative or inventive side of design is intentionally omitted entirely, the quantitative element alone being dealt with. All those whose interests have demanded a quantitative knowledge of the gas engine have met with considerable difficulty in finding reliable data for reference, as there is no book in English treating exclusively of this side of the subject; the data presented by Dr. Lucke are the result of many years' collection and personal experience, and were first classified in the present form for lecture use before his classes at Columbia University. The work is divided into three parts. The first is devoted to power, efficiency, and economy; the second deals with forces in the engine due to gas pressure and inertia; the last part is concerned with the dimensions of the parts to resist the stresses. The work is thorough, clearly written, and exhaustive; the writer has an all-embracing knowledge of his subject, and the book should quickly take its place as a classic in this particular branch of science.

From Messrs. J. M. Dent & Co.—'The Life of King Henry V.,' with Notes, Introduction, and Glossary, edited by W. H. Hudson, with seven illustrations and coloured frontispiece by Dora Curtis, and many illustrations in the Introduction and Glossary from Contemporary Prints. This is an exceedingly well-equipped edition of Shakespeare's heroic play for school purposes, and in the matter of its printing and general production calls for hearty commendation.

From Mr. Henry J. Drane.—'Dorothy's Holiday, and other Stories,' by Edith A. Smith. This book is a collection of pleasantly told stories well suited for a girls' library, one of the best being that entitled 'Maggie's Lovers, a Tale of the Seventeenth Century.' The volume concludes with a prose version of Longfellow's well-known poem, 'The Courtship of Miles Standish.'

From Messrs. Duckworth & Co.—'A Modern Mystic's Way.' Mankind may roughly be divided into two classes: those who keep their spiritual experiences as secrets too holy to be talked of, and those who publicly lay bare their inmost hearts without a tremor. The author of the small volume before us has passed through 'experiences' which she relates in a manner precious, tiresome, and not altogether unaffected. We do not care for the minute dissection of small, introspective natures; even intellectual ability such as is displayed here does not prevent us from becoming annoyed with literary preciosity.

From Messrs. Gale & Polden, Ltd.—'Nelson: his Life as told by Himself,' by Clara E. Gye. This paper-bound volume consists of extracts from Nelson's own correspondence or the writings of other biographers on the the subject. What Miss Gye seems to have contributed is exceedingly little. However, she cheerfully acknowledges her indebtedness to the various authorities, so we suppose no more need be said about the matter. The book is undoubtedly interesting, and it has the advantage of several coloured illustrations. Moreover, it is issued at an extremely moderate price.—From the same publishers we have also received 'A Souvenir of the Royal Naval and Military Tournament—Centenary Year of Trafalgar, 1805-1905,' a bright, attractive publication, containing many of the coloured illustrations of the previous work.

From Mr. Alexander Gardner.—'Logie: a Parish History,' by R. Menzies Fergusson, M.A. Vol. I. The parish of Logie is exceedingly rich in historical associations; its history appeals strongly to the antiquarian, for there are in it many incidents relating to places and persons of more than local importance. The purpose of the present work is to give a full and accurate account of both the ecclesiastical and civil history of the parish, drawn from historical and original documents, many of which have not hitherto been published. Mr. Fergusson has spared no pains to make his work as complete and accurate as possible; the research has undoubtedly been a labour of love. The numerous illustrations are excellent, and a full index adds to the value of the volume.

From Messrs. Wells Gardner, Darton & Co., Ltd.—'Bible Characters, and other Addresses,' by Henry Twells, M.A. This is a volume of sermons of unusual merit; they are written in picturesque language that is both nervous and vivid; they are closely packed with sensible, and often illuminating thought; and they are also the product of a mind of singular honesty and strength. One charm that belonged to the late Canon Twells it is no longer possible for us to enjoy, and that is 'the expressive and musical voice which gave point to instruction well worthy of preservation.'

From Messrs. Greening & Co., Ltd.—'Three for a Penny, or Hints for Advertisers,' by Sundry Witty Persons. There are many hearty laughs in this little brochure for those who have taken special note of advertising methods pursued at the present day; but we are afraid that upon the majority of readers its humour will be lost. The phraseology of the appeal for buns for public schoolboys is especially good. So also is the advertisement of the furniture firm. The illustrations, of which there are a large number, are by David Whitelaw.

From Messrs. Harper & Brothers.—'Hecla Sandwith,' by Edward U. Valentine. The events recorded in this novel take place in a Quaker colony situate in Cental Pennsylvania. Joshua Sandwith, the father of the heroine, is a widower and retired ironmaster, once the owner of a prosperous mine named in honour of his beloved daughter the 'Hecla Furnace.' It has, however, been leased to his scapegrace stepson David. To the neighbourhood there now comes one Richard Hallett, a young English mining engineer, who is desirous of studying American methods in order to become the possessor of a mine in an outlying district. Hecla's father is much interested in the newcomer and his projects, and he forthwith becomes a frequent guest at Sandwith's abode. Hallett is enamoured of the motherless girl, who is already beloved by her cousin Wentworth Oliver, a young lawyer who is indebted to Sandwith for his past education and present position. The complications that ensue therefrom, the death of his benefactor, and Hecla's subsequent pathetic position as heiress and wife, are all described by the author with realistic power, combined with a dramatic fervour of detail, resulting in a story full of interest for the sympathetic reader.

From Messrs. Hodder & Stoughton.—'The Coming Power: a Contemporary History of the Far East, 1898-1905,' by Michael J. F. McCarthy, B.A., T.C.D., &c. Mr. McCarthy is known to us as a spirited and capable writer on Ireland; he now approaches a very different country with characteristic enthusiasm, and his vigorous, well-knit, and entirely interesting record of recent events in the Far East is sure of a hearty welcome. He puts on record with lucidity the causes of the present trouble, and anyone who has hitherto failed to acquire the requisite information to comprehend the trend of recent events cannot do better than read Mr. McCarthy. His volume is well written and well illustrated, but we are sorry there is no index. However, perhaps this defect will be remedied in a second edition.

From the Homeland Association, Ltd., 22 Bride Lane, E.C.—'The Homeland Handbooks. No. 40: Huntingdon and the Great Ouse, with St. Neots and St. Ives, a Handbook for Visitors and Residents,' by H. L. Jackson, M.A., and G. R. Holt Shafto, with Notes on the Flora by E. W. Hunnybun and on Angling by C. W. Bryant. Now is the time, when holidays occupy so large an amount of public attention, that guide books are eagerly consulted. Among such we can warmly commend those issued from the Homeland Association. Each is well printed, concisely written, and beautifully illustrated, while the information imparted is just what the tourist wishes to know. The latest addition to the series—a volume on Huntingdon and the surrounding neighbourhood—is quite equal to anything that has gone before, and is an exceedingly commendable piece of work all round.

From Mr. John Lane.—'Heretics' by Gilbert K. Chesterton. Satire and paradox are on every page of this book, and many a hearty laugh can be safely guaranteed. These criticisms on the methods and aims of some of our modern writers do not, of course, agree with the generally conceived opinions, they are entirely the author's own; but if they are fantastic, they are often brilliantly witty. The essays on Rudyard Kipling and Bernard Shaw are full of good things, and we like the idea of motor-car civilisation 'consuming space . . . roaring on at last to the capture of the solar system, only to find the sun cockney and the stars suburban.' The pseudo-logic employed in these papers leads to the quaintest conclusions, and yet one is obliged to stop sometimes and wonder if Mr. Chesterton is not right after all, or, at least, ask how much of what he says he really believes himself. He impresses you as being so excessively serious at times that you begin to consider whether you may not be wrong in roaring with laughter at him. 'Seeing angels in a vision may make a man a supernaturalist to excess. But merely seeing snakes in delirium tremens does not make him a naturalist,' says Mr. Chesterton. Ought we to laugh? for at least there is a germ of truth in the statement. And again, is it true that 'Scotland continues to be educated and Calvinistic; England continues to be uneducated and happy'—or is the author only laughing at us? Mr. Chesterton's defence of himself against the attack of Mr. McCabe is frivolously clever. The book should be bought, and if the reader marks all the good things in it he will have a copy scored and underlined from end to end.—The same publisher has sent us 'Contarini Fleming,' by the Earl of Beaconsfield, with an Introduction by the Earl of Iddesleigh. This is the twenty-sixth volume of the New Pocket Library, and the book is clearly printed and attractively got up.

From Mr. Thomas Law.—'Does the Cross Save?' by Robert F. Horton. These sermons arose out of certain conversations with students for the ministry, who seemed inclined to surrender the preaching of the Atonement because they could meet with no satisfactory explanation of it. Dr. Horton found that the line of thought presented here seemed to bring relief, and it is with a view to introducing his medicine to a larger number of the spiritually sick that he has been induced to send it broadcast over the world.

From Mr. John Murray.—'History of Ancient Pottery,' by H. B. Walters, M.A., F.S.A. Two volumes. In a short notice it is quite impossible to do justice to a work of this description. We have here an exhaustive history so far as Greek, Etruscan, and Roman pottery is concerned, which is based upon the work of Dr. Samuel Birch, a second edition of which appeared in 1873. In the last thirty years, however, so many discoveries have been made in classical archæology, so many questions have been more or less settled by recent excavations, that this famous work has become out of date, and the present work may be said to take its place as the standard upon the subject. From a consideration of Greek pottery generally, the sites of discovery of vases, their uses, shapes, and the technical processes of their manufacture, the author proceeds to consider the rise of vase painting in Greece, its general characteristics, and to give a very full description of black and red figured vases. The subjects and inscriptions on Greek vases are next dealt with, and it can be easily understood how important these are to the student. Many points in Greek mythology are elucidated by these subjects, while the inscriptions are often of considerable philological interest. As the author points out, these inscriptions often show that the painters were foreigners, and the wide distribution of the places where finds have been made proves how far spread were the dealings of the ancient Greeks. Italian pottery is not dealt with at such length, but is of the greatest interest nevertheless. The book is profusely illustrated, and there are many plates, some of which are coloured. The arrangement of the work is excellent; whenever particular vases are mentioned, the museum and the catalogue number is given; and there is a very full bibliography, and a carefully compiled index. The student, whether he be interested primarily in pottery or in classical art and mythology generally, owes a debt of gratitude to the author.

From the Religious Tract Society.—'The Heroes of Moss Hall School,' by E. C. Kenyon, with illustrations by Alfred Pearse. A tale for boys by a writer who knows boys' life and ways, and how to interest other boys in what he writes. There is plenty of incident in the school life of young Leonard and Walter Garrard, and though the reader knows they are coming out all right at the end, his interest is kept alive all through the days when the youngster's life seems scarcely worth living and the school bully to have all the best of it. The tone of Moss Hall School is, we think—and certainly hope—not up to the average of English schools, but doubtless there are cases which the tale tale fairly describes; anyway, the book is one which most boys—and their sisters—will be pleased to possess.

From the Walter Scott Publishing Co.—'Maurice Woodvil,' by Errington Gray. A pathetic story is evolved by this author from the love of a young and ardent disciple of the Roman Church towards the winsome heroine, Ethel Linton. The girl was worthy of a better fate than the one meted out to her by the implacable Father Anthony, of St. Gudule's, whose enduring affection for his protégé, Maurice, develops into an overmastering desire to prevent the marriage between, and manifest future happiness of, the affianced couple. This forms the basis of the novel, the progress of which makes interesting reading.

From Messrs. Simpkin, Marshall, Hamilton, Kent & Co., Ltd.—'Truth in Conflict with the Creeds,' by John A. Bowman. We do not think Mr. Bowman's essays are so much in advance of the times as he imagines; for some considerable time many thoughtful people have been coming to the conclusions at which he himself has arrived, and we imagine his book will be gladly welcomed by these at least as confirming their own views. The following are some of the subjects with which he deals in a scholarly and able manner: The Origin of Evil, Freedom of Will and God's Foreknowledge, God's Purposes, The Christ sent from Jordan, Names Attributed to Christ, and Love and Glory.

From Messrs. Smith, Elder & Co.—'Spring in a Shropshire Abbey,' by Lady C. Milnes Gaskell. A long succession of garden books has wearied a patient public, and now a series of books of the country side threatens to repeat the performance. Lady Gaskell, however, is wise in her generation; though a true lover of her garden, and indeed of Nature in all her moods and aspects, she is also interested in many other subjects, concerning which she is vastly entertaining. She can tell an anecdote with point and vigour; she has all kinds of lore at her finger-ends, such as old games, rhymes, stories and superstitions; she has a library, and loves her books; and she is a shrewd judge of character, and can delineate it with skill. Her chapters deal with the months in succession, from January to July; the real freedom and atmosphere of the country is often captured and conveyed to the reader, though (as is only to be expected in a book of considerable length) the interest is not well maintained, and the narrative occasionally flags. The photographs are good and well selected.

From Messrs. F. V. White & Co., Ltd.—'The Whisperer,' by Mrs. Coulson Kernahan. For the sake of her family, and more particularly for the sake of a small brother, Azelma marries Phineas Barkhold, a rich débauché, whose house, Greycrags, is undermined with caves and cellars, and is fated to be destroyed by the ever-encroaching waves of the Atlantic. Into this unhappy household comes George Danton, Azelma's old lover, employed as librarian, and Barkhold's nephew is also introduced as secretary and spy. When we say that this man's character is as truly awful as his name, some idea of him will be easily conceived. The tale is frankly sensational, and horror succeeds horror with startling rapidity, but in some cases, at any rate, something is lacking to make them as thrilling as they ought to be. The author does not quite manage to hold the reader breathless, but the story is a good one and carefully written.

From the same.—'Just as it Was,' by John Strange Winter. It may confidently be predicted that the latest novel by this popular author will be widely read. So long as the world lasts probably there will be room for a love story, and this is unadulterated love from beginning to end. Men, soldiers and sailors, too, talk of nothing else over their cigars, so it is hardly to be wondered at that the girls have no other interests in life. Clare, by an accident, secures the man of her choice he by the same accident loses the girl of his; while Audrey, jilted by St. Maur, marries Harry Lowry and learns in time to love him. There hardly seems enough story to fill up 299 closely printed pages, but the author manages it somehow, and succeeds in calming the troubled current at the finish by allowing the cause of all the misunderstanding to die. For our own part this plethora of love will make the reading of the next really stiff book we come across quite a recreation.

From the same.—'Songs Un-Set.'—The name of the author of these short verses is not given, which is a pity. Many of the songs are exceedingly good. 'Silence' and 'Enshrined' may be instanced, while that entitled 'Divine Sculpture' we must quote:

Shock upon shock,
  Blow upon blow,
Till the human block
  Shall quicken,—and grow
Out of the earthy,
  Out of the clod,—
Into a spirit,
  Into a God.

The writer of this may go far.

From the same.—'A Grand Duke of Russia,' by Fred Whishaw. One is, perhaps, inclined to be a little tired of novels dealing with Russia; but this story of the upheaval is so up-to-date, and considers not only the internal effects of the war, but has for a leading incident the events of Vladimir's Day, that it is likely to be read with considerable interest. To some extent the story itself takes a secondary position; but Volodia Pavlof's unfortunate marriage with Matrona, his friendship with Nathalie, and his father the Grand Duke, and the adventures into which his sympathy with the downtrodden lead him, make a sufficiently exciting narrative. The death of Matrona in Siberia leaves Pavlof free to marry Nathalie. It does not seem to occur to the author that such a marriage, under the circumstances, is disgusting. We cannot understand what possessed him to mar his story in this way.

New Editions and Reprints.—Mr. Edward Stanford has sent us a new edition of 'Murray's Handbook of Travel Talk.' The fact that this is the nineteenth edition of this well arranged and valuable book makes any comment upon it superfluous.

We have received from Mr. Alston Rivers a copy of Mr. Arnold Bennett's book, 'The Loot of Cities, being the Adventures of a Millionaire in Search of Joy.' It is a smart story of the doings of certain prevalent social and theatrical types.

We have been favoured by the Washington Government Printing Office, U.S.A. with a copy of their excellent Annual Report of the Board of Regents of the Smithsonian Institution in that city. The volume contains full particulars of the various operations for the year ending June 30, 1903, with the usual complement of elaborate illustrations and maps.

PUBLICATIONS OF THE WEEK.

WITH AN INDEX OF AUTHORS, TIT SUBJECTS OF BOOKS IN ONE ALPHABET.

All books are in cloth when not otherwise described. When the word 'net' is printed against the price of a book it means that there is not the usual trade allowance. The words of the Index which are printed in italics refer to the name under which the title of a work appears in larger type. Publishers who observe the omission of a book from the list will confer a favour by sending a copy of the title to the office for insertion in the next number.

LIST OF FORTHCOMING BOOKS.

AUTUMN, 1905.

SIX-SHILLING NOVELS.

Crown 8vo. cloth gilt.

THE LADY NAVIGATORS. By Edward Noble, Author of 'The Edge of Circumstance.' [Ready early in September.

Mr. Noble's work has been compared by the critics with that of Rudyard Kipling and Joseph Conrad. His new book is another story of the sea, displaying a delightfully humorous element that should win the author many new admirers.

THE BENEFACTOR. By Ford Madox Hueffer. [Early in September.

An admirable piece of character drawing. The literary quality of the style is that of a true artist, and the story is interesting from the first page to the last. We confidently anticipate that this will prove one of the most widely read novels of the year.

LIEUTENANT GULLIVER JONES. By Edwin Lester Arnold. [Early in September.

The author of 'Phra the Phœnician' gives us here the adventures of a resourceful American sailor in the planet Mars. Although Mr. Arnold's Martians have little in common with the weird creations of Mr. H. G. Wells, his book holds the reader from start to finish, and has the advantage of possessing a strong love interest.

OTHER NEW BOOKS.

Crown 8vo. cloth gilt, price 3*s*. 6*d*.

REFLECTIONS OF A HOUSEHOLDER. By E. H. Lacon Watson, Author of 'The Making of a Man,' 'The Templars,' &c. [Ready early in September.

In this book of light sketches Mr. Lacon Watson returns to the vein of 'Benedictine' and 'An Attic in Bohemia.' The little essays which make up this amusing volume deal, in Mr. Watson's delicately humorous fashion, with a wide variety of subjects, ranging from domestic pets to the difficulties of a married book-lover.

8vo. cloth gilt, price 10*s*. 6*d*. With many Illustrations specially drawn for the Author.

SUN, WIND, AND DREAM. By Mona Caird. [Early in September.

This is something more than a guide-book, admirably as it would serve in this capacity for anyone who wished to travel in the footsteps of Mrs. Mona Caird. The spirit of Provence pervades the whole book, and the author is evidently in love with the beautiful country of which she writes so well.

8vo. cloth gilt.

HERE AND THERE. By H. G. Keene, C.I.E., Author of 'A Servant of John Company' &c. &c. [Early in October.

Mr. Keene is one of the few survivors of the old régime in India. In this fascinating book of reminiscences he gives us stories of old Haileybury, and of Indian life in days before the Mutiny, while in the later part of the volume he brings his recollections down to the literary London of quite modern times. There is hardly a name of importance in the history of India or of literature during the last eighty years that does not figure in Mr. Keene's pages.

BOOKS RECENTLY PUBLISHED.

SIX-SHILLING NOVELS.

Crown 8vo. cloth gilt.

GROUND IVY. By Myra Swan.

'Ground ivy clings lovingly to the soil as Edith Harding did to her ancient Yorkshire home among the fir trees and the heather. Her story makes a long book—in two parts, "Love of a Place" and "Love of a Man"—and Myra Swan, who is far from being a prolific author, has taken her time in weaving an atmosphere about her tale, and lingering over its talk (a little bookish sometimes), its scenery and its few, but likeable, well-featured characters. A book generously conceived and agreeably written, which readers who do not like being rushed or excited will enjoy.'—The Times.

ADVENTURES OF LOUIS DURAL. By Marguerite Bryant, Author of 'A Great Responsibility.'

'A strongly written book, full of well realised situations.'—Evening Standard.

'Miss Marguerite Bryant handles her book with expert skill and originality. Dural is a fascinating personality, adventures fall thick and fast, and they are men and women who walk in the pages, not mere shadows. Altogether I have not read a better tale of adventure for years.' Daily Mail.

'The novel is primarily one of incident, and it is full of cleverly contrived surprises.' Oxford Chronicle.

AUBREY ELLISON. By St. John Lucas.

'It is extraordinary as a conception: in treatment bold to the verge of audacity, and purely realistic in the presentment of the personages of a story which surpasses every previous romance of mysticism.'—World.

'The writing is good throughout.'—Athenæum.

'The most important book of the year, Mr. John Lucas's Romance contains much admirable writing: much uncommon wit; and it proves the author to possess a more than ordinary perception of the beautiful. There is abundance of hope for him.'—Black and White.

THE MAKING OF A MAN. By E. H Lacon Watson, Author of 'The Templars.'

'All may read it for the sake of the light and genial touch displayed in the treatment of life; comedy is here plentifully provided, and is of the best.'—Daily Graphic.

'An uncommonly good bit of character sketching. The story moves well, and the interest never flags.'—Nottingham Guardian.

'The story is powerful, and its author has an insight into human nature not too common among the novelists and writers with an accomplished and imaginative art.'—Scotsman.

THE KING'S SCARLET. By Horace Wyndham, Author of 'Queen's Service' and 'Soldiers of the Queen.'

'"The King's Scarlet" was bound to be an interesting book, for it deals with the troubles of a gentleman ranker, and Mr. Horace Wyndham was himself a gentleman ranker, and has written excellent books on the subject already. The present volume more than fulfils expectations, for the tale is good, as well as the army colour.'—Queen.

'"The King's Scarlet," a military novel, is from the pen of Mr. Horace Wyndham, and deals in an intimate manner with life in the ranks, at home and abroad, in barracks and camp, in peace and war.'—Westminster Gazette.

'Everyone interested in the rank and file of the army should read "The King's Scarlet."' Daily Mail.

LAMMAS GROVE. By Carlton Dawe.

'Mr. Carlton Dawe has always a good story to tell; well-observed types to portray; because he employs a mould of form above the ordinary; and because he is a craftsman.' Liverpool Weekly.

'Not since Mr. Morrison's "Tales of Mean Streets" has there appeared such a picture of the blacker side of London life as Mr. Carlton Dawe's "Lammas Grove." It is vastly more sinister than Egdon Heath in "The Return of the Native."'—Manchester Guardian.

'There is some strong and ambitious work in "Lammas Grove," which is, in our opinion, the most artistic book that Mr. Carlton Dawe has written.'—Literary World.

Also crown 8vo. cloth gilt. Price 5*s*.

PRIDE OF THE MORNING. By Agnes Giberne, Author of 'Sun, Moon, and Stars' &c.

'Miss Giberne, apart from her scientific books, is a writer of stories for the young; and there is a trace of this in her story of the youth and love of Phyllys, "the pride o' the morning."' The Times.

THE SCIENCE OF LIFE SERIES.

Cloth, 2*s*. net; paper covers, 1*s*. net.

THE SCIENCE OF LIFE. By Mrs. Craigie (John Oliver Hobbes).

An Essay read before the Ruskin Society of Birmingham.

HEALTH AND HOLINESS. By Francis Thompson.

'A study of the relation between Brother Ass, the Body, and his Rider, the Soul.'

WORDS OF A BELIEVER. By Félicité de Lamennais. Translated, with an Introduction, by W. G. Hutchison. Cloth, 1*s*. net: paper cover, 6*d*. net. [Ready.

'Here is a book which all men and women in earnest about good should read with care and deeply ponder. It is Lamennais' "Les Paroles d'un Croyant." This a book for quiet moments. It may be opened at random, for on every page may be found pearls of great price. Nothing is more sorely needed in these times of hurry and scurry than that men and women who are really in earnest about social reform should be able to retire occasionally to a quiet spot to obtain spiritual refreshment by intercourse with a lofty soul, and this little book affords the means.'

NEW EDITIONS.

THE WESTERN AVERNUS. By Morley Roberts.

Crown 8vo. cloth gilt. Price 3*s*. 6*d*.

'All who think of going to the far West of America or British Columbia would do well to read this book carefully before booking their passage.'—To-day.

'These powerful sketches of life in the Western States of America are written from first hand knowledge, and are memorable pictures of a period which has largely passed away.'—Echo.

'This story of his wanderings and hardships in Western America reads like a novel—even like a novel by Mr. Roberts himself. As a picture of earlier days in British Columbia it should soon be invaluable.'—St. James's.

STEPHEN REMARX. The Story of a Christian Venture.

By Rev. and Hon. James Adderley, M.A. Twelfth Edition (20,000 copies), revised and enlarged. Narrow 8vo cloth, 1*s*. net; paper cover, 6*d*. net.

'It is the best bit of so-called "Christian Socialism" ever put forward in the shape of a tale. Some philanthropist might do a good service, not to religion merely, but to humanity at large, by buying a few thousands and giving them away gratis.'—St. James' Gazette.

SERMONS FROM BROWNING. By Rev. F. Eland, M.A., Vicar of St. Luke's, Hornsey. New and Enlarged Edition. Fcap. 8vo. cloth gilt, gilt top, bevelled boards. Price 2*s*. 6*d*. net.

'"Sermons from Browning" have reached a second edition, and have proved themselves, therefore, a good wine, which needs no bush. It is to be hoped that the author's object may be obtained and his readers sent to learn at Browning's feet something of the religion by which he was inspired.'—Church Bells.

THREE LITTLE GARDENERS. By Agnes J. Talbot. Second Edition, Revised and Corrected. Twenty-six Illustrations by Miss Gertrude M. Bradley. A Diary of Twelve Month's Work in a Child's Garden. A delightful little book of fun, frolic, and work by busy little hands and active brains. Coloured Frontispiece. Square 8vo. cloth gilt. Price 2*s*. 6*d*. net.

IS CLOTH NECESSARY AS A BOOK COVERING?

Is there not a 'feeling in the air' which points to a quiet revolution in book production in this country? Unless we have mistaken the signs of the times, the beginning of the end has come to the long-established trade custom of putting an expensive cloth binding which will last fifty years on books which will be dead in five months.

Those who could supply the most trustworthy and interesting information on this important question are the town and country representatives of the publishers: will some of them be good enough to give us the benefit of their experience? What we hear is that, generally speaking, the booksellers do not care to buy novels or other ephemeral books in cloth bindings; not, of course, that they personally have any objection to the clean protective cloth, but because the book-buying public prefers now to give not twenty shillings for four or five more than doubtful six-shilling novels, but twenty shillings for forty good sixpenny ones. If the new six-shilling novel is any good, the reading public knows it is only a question of a few months, when it will be obtainable in good type, on good paper, in a 'handy' limp paper cover, for about fourpence halfpenny.

The space at the disposal of any bookseller is limited, many millions of copies of 'paper-cover' fiction are in stock in book shops, and by sheer weight and bulk they are helping to crowd out the 'cloth-cover' book.

Rent must be paid and a living won out of that kind of stock which sells, and the shelves which formerly held nothing but cloth-bound stock are now filled with what is known as 'cheap stuff,' which was at first looked at with contempt by the better class of booksellers.

It is not by any means only in books that the public has been educated to expect cheapness. Look at the girls; why, all they need have on, when full dressed for church or chapel parade, need not cost a sovereign; and yet they are better dressed than their grandmothers, and more reasonably.

No one can say that Messrs. W. H. Smith & Son do not make brave shows of bright-coloured cloth-covered books at their bookstalls; one would think that to recoup them for this great display of 'cloth gilt, extra,' the shelves must be constantly replenished to replace the sold stock. But the extraordinary part of it is that you may look at bookstalls for ten minutes or half an hour while waiting for a train, and, more often than not, never see a cloth book sold. This cannot be because Messrs. Smith do not give discount; very tempting, indeed, are the tickets so freely displayed with 'Published at ——, offered at ——' on them; not old books or soiled books; many of them but a few months ago figured among the 'Best-selling Books of the Week.'

Of course binding in cloth is too useful and suitable for books in regular demand ever to go out of fashion entirely; but we are greatly mistaken if the form in which new English and American fiction of the future will be published is not one closely approaching in appearance and price that of the admirable three-franc fifty French 'Roman.'

NOTES AND ANNOUNCEMENTS.

Messrs. Longmans, Green & Co. have an important and seasonable book for this hot weather in 'Ice or Water: Another Appeal to Induction from the Scholastic Methods of Modern Geology,' by Sir Henry H. Howorth. Sir Henry is a delightful writer, and the reading of his 'Glacial Nightmare' almost persuaded us to abandon ice and go in for water; but in these dog days something with a little ice in it seems more natural. One of the compensations of dying will be to see if Sir Henry Howorth is right or not.

As a general 'Week End' paper the Saturday Westminster is hard to beat: there are about twenty-four yards of double-width columns—all interesting.

In reviewing the Hon. F. Leveson-Gower's book 'Bygone Days,' just published by Mr. Murray, the Daily Telegraph gives the following anecdote, the French of which would, perhaps, hardly bear a literal translation: 'Mr. Leveson-Gower often met Mrs. Hudson, the wife of the "Railway King." He says she "was a homely old lady, to whom were attributed many funny sayings. One of them was that 'people in Turkey should do as the Turkeys did.' Another was that when ordering a gâteau of a French confectioner she said to him, in answer to his question, 'De quelle grandeur le voulez-vous?' 'Aussi grand que mon derrière.'"'

Messrs. Routledge will publish immediately a 'Descriptive Handbook of Architecture,' by Martin A. Buckmaster, the principal examiner to the Board of Education and to the Education Board of the London County Council. The volume contains seventeen full-page plates and about seventy textual illustrations from photographs and from drawings made by the author. A feature of the book is an illustrated alphabetical glossary of architectural terms, and the volume, which is supplied with an index and with a brief bibliography, affords an accurate text-book and guide to the study of this art as a branch of history and of æsthetics.

Messrs. Hutchinson & Co. are about to issue a new novel entitled 'The Man who Won,' by Mrs. Baillie Reynolds, author of that successful story 'Phœbe in Fetters.' The scene of the present work is laid partly in South Africa and partly in England.

A novel of modern Welsh life, entitled 'The Conflict of Owen Prytherch,' by Walter M. Gallichan ('Geoffrey Mortimer'), has just been published by Mr. G. A. Morton, of Edinburgh.

The third edition of the 'Printers' Handbook of Trade Recipes, Hints, and Suggestions,' by Chas. T. Jacobi, is now in the press, and will be ready in September next, in time for the opening of the various technical classes. This new issue will be revised, enlarged, and brought up to date, and will include a section devoted to the linotype.

The new 'Author's Edition' of Miss Braddon's novels will be completed by the publication, on July 17, of 'Lady Audley's Secret.' The issue of this edition, which consists of fifty-eight novels at 2s. 6d. a volume, was begun in December last.

The School Manager for this week contains an illustrated descriptive report of a Conference of Managers and Teachers of Sunday Schools, held at Surbiton last week. 'Bystander,' who is popularly supposed to be a well-known M.P., contributes his usual humorous comments on current educational events.

Will the bakers sell books if the booksellers sell biscuits? We notice the 'latest novelty' announced in Messrs. Abel Heywood & Son's trade circular is 'A Penny Box (Tin) of Biscuits in Miniature Form.'

All who do business in picture post-cards should see the special offers to the trade contained in the trade circular of Messrs. Abel Heywood & Son, 58 Oldham Street, Manchester.

There is a very pleasant notice of the late Mr. Norman MacLeod, bookseller, of Edinburgh, in the July number of the Highland Witness of the United Free Church of Scotland.

The stirring events in the important Russian port of Odessa should create a special interest in two books published not long ago, the scenes of action in both being in Odessa. They are from the pen of Mr. Jaakoff Prelooker, who was head-master of a Government school in Odessa, and bear the titles of 'Rabbi Shalom on the Shores of the Black Sea' (Simpkin, Marshall), and 'Under the Czar and Queen Victoria, the Experience of a Russian Reformer' (James Nisbet). The author tells of a reform movement originated by himself in Odessa, and sheds many sidelights on local life, police, relations between Christians and Jews, &c. Both books are fully illustrated, the frontispiece of 'Rabbi Shalom on the Black Sea' being a striking view of Odessa harbour, showing the long elevated railway bridge and other buildings burned during the riots.

A new work on the notable Lake residents, by Frederick Sessions, is to be published immediately by Mr. Elliot Stock under the title 'Literary Celebrities of the Lake District.' The chapters deal with the personality and surroundings of Ruskin, De Quincey, Linton, Southey, Professor Wilson, Charles Lloyd, Harriet Martineau, and other notable writers, and will furnish much fresh information gleaned from the district. The work will contain many illustrations, some of which have not been published before.

'The Russian Revolutionary Movement' is the title of a new book which is announced for publication on the 19th inst. by Mr. Alston Rivers. Unlike the majority of recent works dealing with Russia, the book does not rely on sensational exposures, but presents rather an accurate and scientific analysis of the political movement from its inception. The author is Mr. Konni Zilliacus.

A special Holiday Number of Photography will be issued on July 25. Among other matters with which it will deal will be Photographic Holiday Centres, Development away from Home, Summer Exposures, the Photography of Trees, and What to take away for a Photographic Holiday. It will contain extra pages and extra illustrations, some of which will be printed in colour.

The second volume of the 'Socialist Library,' which will be ready in a few days, is entitled 'Socialism and Society,' and it is by J. Ramsay MacDonald, the editor of the series.

Under the title of 'The Poor and the Land,' Messrs. Longmans, Green & Co. will shortly publish in book form, at a popular price, the Report on the Salvation Army Colonies in America and at Hadleigh in Essex, recently made by Mr. H. Rider Haggard to the Colonial Office in his capacity of Commissioner. Mr. Haggard has added to his Report an Introduction dealing with the question generally, and with arguments that have been advanced against certain points in his scheme. The book will be illustrated with photographs taken by Miss Angela Rider Haggard, who acted as her father's private secretary throughout his journey.

We regret to have to record the death of Mr. Charles Birchall, the proprietor of The Liverpool Journal of Commerce, a paper with a world-wide reputation. Mr. Birchall, who was a Derbyshire man, had long been recognised and honoured in Liverpool as the champion of the poor and the advocate of enterprise and advancement.

Messrs. Gurney & Jackson announce that they have arranged for an English translation of the well-known German work 'Technical Methods of Chemical Analysis,' edited by Dr. George Lunge.

According to the Cincinnati Times Star, if you want a book which is 'full of snap' read 'The Orchid,' by Robert Grant.

'A Voyage at Anchor,' by W. Clark Russell, is published in New York by the A. L. Burt Company.

'YOUNG men, especially in America,' says Mr. Lang, 'write to me and ask me to recommend "a course of reading." Distrust a course of reading! People who really care for books read all of them. There is no other course. Let this be a reply. No other answer shall they get from me, the inquiring young men.' If the writer of these words does not convey the impression of having himself read quite all literature, he at least has a way of giving one a sense of the splendid vastness and infinite variety of the literary realm. Contrast with his tone the somewhat peevish note in an utterance of his fellow-countryman Hume. Writing to Gilbert Elliot in 1757, Hume says, referring to his 'History,' 'I undertook this work because I was tired of idleness and found reading alone, after I had perused all good books (which I think is soon done), a somewhat languid occupation.'

A passage depicting some of the charms of reading may be quoted from the opening chapter of our author's 'Adventures among Books.' He is speaking of the ancient classics. 'There is a charm in finding ourselves—our common humanity, our puzzles, our cares, our joys—in the writings of men severed from us by race, religion, speech, and half the gulf of historical time which no other literary pleasure can equal. Then there is to be added, as the university preacher observed, "the pleasure of despising our fellow-creatures who do not know Greek." Doubtless in that there is great consolation.'

The regret is often expressed that the Bible has been from our earliest years so often read to us and by us, so regularly dinned into our ears from the pulpit, and so quoted and paraphrased at every turn, that we are incapable, at maturity, of appreciating its worth, spiritual and literary. Mr. Lang thinks it is much the same with Tennyson's poems: use has made them too familiar. To the boy Andrew, turning in weariness from Tupper's 'Proverbial Philosophy,' the poet of the Table Round dawned as a new light; 'a new music was audible, a new god came into my medley of a Pantheon, a god never to be dethroned.'

Concerning our first loves in books, the writer says some true things. 'People talk, in novels, about the delights of a first love. One may venture to doubt whether everybody exactly knows which was his or her first love, of men or women, but about our first loves in books there can be no mistake. They were, and remain, the dearest of all; after boyhood the bloom is off the literary rye. . . . As long as we live we hope to read, but we "never can recapture the first fine, careless rapture." Besides, one begins to write, and that is fatal. My own first essays were composed at school—for other boys. Not long ago the gentleman who was then our

English master wrote to me informing me he was my earliest public, and that he had never credited my younger brother with the essays which that unscrupulous lad ("I speak of him but brotherly") was accustomed to present for his consideration.'

Mr. Lang's recollections of Stevenson are among the best things in his book. Although not of Stevenson's closest friends, he was intimate enough to feel the full charm of his brilliant junior. Here is his impression of the young man as he first saw him in 1873: 'He looked as, in my eyes, he always did look, more like a lass than a lad, with a rather long, smooth, oval face, brown hair worn at greater length than is common, large, lucid eyes, but whether blue or brown I cannot remember—if brown, certainly light brown. On appealing to the authority of a lady I learn that brown was the hue. His colour was a trifle hectic, as is not unusual at Mentone, but he seemed, under his big blue cloak, to be of slender, yet agile frame. He was like nobody else whom I ever met. There was a sort of uncommon celerity in changing expression, in thought and speech.' And yet this smooth-faced, girlish-looking youngster was brimful of pluck. 'In Paris at a café,' narrates Mr. Lang, 'I remember that Mr. Stevenson heard a Frenchman say the English were cowards. He got up and slapped the man's face. "Monsieur, vous m'avez frappé," said the Gaul. "A ce qu'il parait," said the Scot, and there it ended.' To Stevenson life was a drama, 'and he delighted, like his own British admirals, to do things with a certain air.' He was possessed with the inextinguishable childish passion for making believe, and it remained with him to the end.

Those who have a taste for books about books will hunt long before they will find one more tickling to the palate than Mr. Lang's 'Adventures among Books.' These chapters, it is true, are reprints of magazine articles, but mostly of a date sufficiently remote to make their re-appearance practically equivalent to a fresh appearance. The fine frontispiece portrait in photogravure is after a painting by Sir William Richmond, R.A., which, we are told, 'was done about the time when most of the Essays were written—and that was not yesterday.'—PERCY F. BICKNELL, in The Dial (Chicago).

ICONOGRAPHY OF EDITIONS OF 'DON QUIXOTE.'

Is there a really worthy translation of 'Don Quixote' in English? There are several, but is there one which is not only correct but reflects something of the life and fire of the original? M. J. de Coussanges, in La Revue, informs us that Mr. Henrich, publisher, of Barcelona, has commenced the publication of an 'Iconographie des éditions de "Don Quichotte,"' unique of its kind. It will contain the frontispieces of all the editions of the celebrated romance—there have been over 600 editions of it—also facsimiles of all the illustrations of 'Don Quixote,' with bibliographical particulars of the various translations, adaptations, and commentaries which have been published in all languages.

REPORT OF THE INCOME-TAX COMMITTEE.

THERE was surely a touch of irony in the fact that, along with the recommendations of the Income-Tax Committee showing how the poor income maker is to be squeezed like a lemon to extract the last drop came the report of General Butler's Committee showing how the millions wrung from private individuals are wasted by the State. The following extracts are from the Times of June 28:

The matters into which the Committee were instructed to inquire and the general scope of its reference are thus stated in the introductory portion of the report:

> (a) The prevention of fraud and evasion;
> (b) The treatment of income derived from copyrights, patent rights, and terminable annuities;
> (c) The allowances made in respect of the depreciation of assets charge to capital account.
> (d) The system of computing profits assessable under Schedule D on the average of the profits actually realised in the three years preceding the year of assessment.
> (e) The rules and regulations governing the recovery by taxpayers of over-payments of income tax.

After describing briefly the present method of assessment the report goes on to deal with the question of 'fraud and evasion.' After remarking that the system of assessment which lies at the root of British income-tax administration, 'collection at the source,' is in itself a great check to fraud and evasion, the report says that there is still a substantial amount of both evils, as well as much neglect to assist the authorities by making full and careful returns.

> If, on the other hand, it were made obligatory, under a comparatively small penalty, on each individual who receives an income-tax form to fill it up and to return it (even though the entry required be no more than 'nil'), the opportunity of evasion would be greatly reduced. The conscience-salving method of evasion, passive neglect, would be rendered less easy. The area of possible evasion would be enormously diminished, the information at the disposal of the authorities would be greatly increased, and the work of discrimination would be much facilitated. . . .
> . . . At the same time every facility ought to be given to the taxpayer to comply with the obligation thrown upon him. We have drawn the attention of the Inland Revenue Department to the fact that the forms should be as short and clear as possible, and couched in simple and intelligible language, and we are glad to say that the Department have already taken the matter in hand. We also strongly recommend that each form should be accompanied by a post-free and addressed return envelope.
> Under these conditions it would speedily become the general custom to send in the return; and those who at present, for their own purposes, avoid so doing would find that their action laid them open to suspicion.
> Turning to the case of fraudulent evasion, we desire to record our opinion that energetic action should be taken wherever there is reasonable suspicion of fraud. The occasional failure of a prosecution would not be so great an evil as the immunity which is now too often accorded to continued dishonesty.

The Committee recommend further that the authorities should be empowered to publish names and details in cases of gross fraud.

As regards the treatment of income from copyrights, patent rights, and terminable annuities, the Committee see no reason for altering the existing practice as regards copyright; but as regards patent rights they think that the 'taxation of income at its source should be applied to profits from patents.' There is, in their opinion, no reason for altering the law as regards terminable annuities.

As regards the important question of depreciation of assets charged to capital account, the Committee, after reviewing the present practice, say:

> A want of knowledge of the law and of authorised practice and the want of uniformity thereby engendered, are the matters that principally call for remedy in this branch of our inquiry; and apart from them we do not consider that any substantial change is called for beyond that already recommended as regards depreciation of premises.

As regards repayments the report says:

> The forms hitherto provided for the statement of income have certainly been unnecessarily formidable in appearance to persons other than experts. We are glad to say, however, that the inquiries of the Committee have led to a reconsideration of the matter, with the result that a form has been drafted which is much simpler and more intelligible, thus diminishing the difficulties of inexperienced applicants on that score. We think that it would also be well if it were made more generally known that applicants are entitled to apply to the Surveyor of Taxes for gratuitous advice and assistance in filling up the form.

The Committee recommend that the grant of exemption or abatement by reason of smallness of income should be abolished in the case of persons resident outside the United Kingdom, with possible exceptions in favour of British subjects.

The Committee do not think any alteration in the law is needed in connection with co-operative societies.

THE RISE OF THE BAEDEKERS.

THE publication of a new and improved edition of Baedeker's 'Northern France'* calls public attention to the Baedeker series of guide books as a striking instance of the evolution and growth of the guide-book idea, which, from crude and imperfect beginnings, has developed into the remarkably complete and indispensable handbooks which are now known all over the world. The familiar red volumes to be seen in the hands of travellers in every country have won their way largely by sheer merit and skilful adaptation to the wants of the traveller; and their remarkable circulation, running up into thousands of volumes annually, is no mere accident. The original 'Karl Baedeker,' the founder of the house, was born at Essen, Germany, in 1801, and after serving an apprenticeship in Heidelberg and Berlin set up a small bookshop of his own at Coblenz in 1827. His first effort as a publisher of guides was a handbook to the Rhine between Mayence and Cologne, published in 1828. This was followed some years after by a guide to Belgium and Holland, and later by a handbook to Germany and Austria. These were compiled by Baedeker himself, and reveal the special characteristics and excellences which have made his name famous. He died in 1859, having published nine volumes at that time. The remarkable growth of the business since that time is shown by the fact that there are about thirty volumes in German, nearly the same number in French, and twenty-six volumes in English. The international character of the series appears in the fact that many of the volumes have had a larger sale in the English and French than in the German edition. These English editions are not strictly translations, but rather new versions based on the German original, with many minor changes to suit the needs and tastes of English or American people. Among the noteworthy features of the guides which have given them such a wide popularity are their compact and concise arrangement of the material, enabling the reader to get at the desired information in the quickest time; the honesty and reliability of all their statements and suggestions, based on personal experience and observation, as to hotels, railways, and all the details of travel so necessary to the tourist; the accuracy of their historical and general data, and elimination of unnecessary description or padding of all kinds; and, last but not least, the freshness and timeliness of the information, the books being frequently revised and brought down to date.'—The New York 'Book Buyer.'

RECENT VERSE.

It is with smaller poetry—we hesitate again to say minor poetry after the criticism which that phrase elicited some little while since—it is with smaller poetry as it is with oats and hops and other cultivated crops: there are good seasons and bad. The season whose fruits have been accumulating on our shelves for the past few months seems to be a poor one, if the twoscore and more of volumes upon which our opinion is based are representative; for of these many are wholly negligible, and in the remainder the authentic note is rare. Most of the poets have written because others wrote first, which for a beginner is a proper enough incentive, provided that he does not expect his parrotings when printed to be extolled as originalities. Indeed, almost all poets have begun like that. Perhaps the young poet waiting to-day for such an outside impulse is peculiarly unfortunate, for there is at this moment curiously little poetry in the air, and no commanding fresh voice to set one's instrument by. We are deep in the trough of the wave, a situation which the volumes of the smaller singers can indicate as quickly as those of the larger—just as an old cottage weather-house with its little man and little woman emerging and receding for wet and fine is as useful for ordinary purposes as the most elaborate and distinguished barometer hanging in a ducal hall. Before you can get good new smaller poetry you must get good new greater poetry.—Spectator.

AN ENGLISH CHURCH EXHIBITION.

Books in print and in manuscript form a large and most valuable portion of the important—the unique—'English Church History Exhibition,' which closes this (Saturday) evening at the delightful little cathedral city of St. Albans. We advise all our readers who can to spend their Saturday afternoon there, and we are sure all who take our advice will thank us for giving it to them.

The scholarly catalogue of exhibits has nearly two hundred pages. An illustrated edition is in preparation. The oldest book is an eighth-century manuscript copy of the Gospels in Latin, lent from Hereford Cathedral. A tenth-century manuscript of Bede on the Apocalypse was lent from Lambeth Palace Library, but once belonged to Crediton Cathedral. There are two twelfth-century Latin Gospel Books with Old English glosses, a twelfth century York Missal, a twelfth-century Pontifical, and several beautiful manuscript Bibles in Latin, and in Wycliffe's and in Purvey's English. A Book of Services (1400) in Latin is open at the wedding ceremony, and contains these words in English, 'With this gold ring I thee wed, gold and silver I thee give, and with my body I thee worship, and with all my worldly catel I thee honour.' 'Worldly' is spelled 'wortelych,' 'I' is sometimes represented by the capital letter as now, and sometimes spelled 'ich.' Perphaps some day we shall spell 'high' thus, 'hi.' There is a 'Biblia Pauperum' block book of 1420 lent by the Bishop of Truro. No. 202* is a 'York Pie' (see Preface to Prayer-Book). There are only two known, while there are several copies of the 'Sarum Pie' in existence. There are several Primers in English (1540) and in Latin, Prayer-Books of 1549, 1550, 1551, 1552, &c. (including two 'sealed books' of 1662), English Testaments of 1534, &c., English Bibles of 1539, &c., Psalm-books in verse of 1576, &c., early Hymn Books, some books from Little Gidding (see 'John Inglesant'), Acts of Parliament affecting the Church, and many other valuable volumes.

Among those who have lent books are the Duke of Rutland, Lord Aldenham, the Earl of Crawford, the Deans and Chapters of several cathedrals, Eton College, some Oxford and Cambridge colleges, Mr. E. C. Cockerell, Mr. Alfred Huth, Canon Gibbs, and, of course, Mr. Bernard Quaritch.

The ancient church organs and other musical instruments, the mitres, crosiers, bishops' rings, and other ecclesiastical ornaments do not come within our province, but are none the less interesting. A cope of English make, lent by Mr. W. H. St. John Hope, was given by Æneas Silvius Piccolomini, the literary Pope Pius II., to Pienza Cathedral.

ORCHIDS.

Messrs. Doubleday, Page & Co., of New York, publish a work by W. H. Gibson and Helena Jelliffe entitled 'Our Native Orchids.' This work deals with practically all the native American orchids, and contains nearly 100 illustrations. It is published at $1.35 net.

A CHARMING NELSON MEMORIAL.

The 21st of October next is the hundredth anniversary of Nelson's great victory and death, and the day is to be celebrated all over the British Empire.

There is already much Nelson literature, but we doubt if anything more charmingly appropriate will be produced than the reprint of Southey's account of the 'Battle of Trafalgar' which has been most perfectly produced by Messrs. Robert Rivière & Son, bookbinders and booksellers, 29-33 Heddon Street, Regent Street, London. The little memorial is printed in red and black on handmade paper, and bound in lambskin, with design in gold on the side. The price is 1*s.* 9*d.*

We make no apology for reprinting from it the splendid words in which Southey tells us

'How the Death of Nelson was Felt in England.'

'The death of Nelson was felt in England as something more than a public calamity: men started at the intelligence, and turned pale, as if they had heard of the loss of a dear friend. An object of our admiration and affection, of our pride and of our hopes, was suddenly taken from us; and it seemed as if we had never, till then, known how deeply we loved and reverenced him. What the country had lost in its great naval hero—the greatest of our own and of all former times, was scarcely taken into the account of grief. So perfectly, indeed, had he performed his part that the maritime war, after the battle of Trafalgar, was considered at an end; the fleets of the enemy were not merely defeated, but destroyed; new navies must be built, and a new race of seamen reared for them, before the possibility of their invading our shores could again be contemplated. It was not, therefore, from any selfish reflection upon the magnitude of our loss that we mourned for him: the general sorrow was of a higher character. The people of England grieved that funeral ceremonies, public monuments, and posthumous rewards were all which they could now bestow upon him whom the King, the legislature, and the nation would alike have delighted to honour; whom every tongue would have blessed; whose presence in every village through which he might have passed would have wakened the church bells, have given schoolboys a holiday, have drawn children from their sports to gaze upon him, and "old men from the chimney corner," to look upon Nelson ere they died. The victory of Trafalgar was celebrated, indeed, with the usual forms of rejoicing, but they were without joy; for such already was the glory of the British Navy, through Nelson's surpassing genius, that it scarcely seemed to receive any addition from the most signal victory that ever was achieved upon the seas; and the destruction of this mighty fleet, by which all the maritime schemes of France were totally frustrated, hardly appeared to add to our security or strength; for while Nelson was living to watch the combined squadrons of the enemy we felt ourselves as secure as now, when they were no longer in existence.

‘There was reason to suppose, from the appearances upon opening the body, that, in the course of nature, he might have attained, like his father, to a good old age. Yet he cannot be said to have fallen prematurely whose work was done; nor ought he to be lamented who died so full of honours, and at the height of human fame. The most triumphant death is that of the martyr; the most awful that of the martyred patriot; the most splendid that of the hero in the hour of victory; and if the chariot and the horses of fire had been vouchsafed for Nelson's translation, he could scarcely have departed in a brighter blaze of glory. He has left us, not indeed his mantle of inspiration, but a name and an example, which are at this hour inspiring hundreds of the youth of England; a name which is our pride, and an example which will continue to be our shield and our strength. Thus it is that the spirits of the great and the wise continue to live and to act after them—verifying, in this sense, the language of the old mythologist:

Τοὶ μὲν δαίμονές εἰσι, Διὸς μεγάλου διὰ βουλὰς
Ἐσθλοί, ἐπιχθόνιοι, φύλακες θνητῶν ἀνθρώπων.’

BRITISH JOURNALISTS IN BOHEMIA.

A tour which originated in a very simple fashion, but which has developed into a veritable progress, has just been accomplished through the delightful kingdom of Bohemia, by a party of twenty English journalists, members of the British Association of International Journalists. The tour was suggested and arranged by Mr. James Baker, F.R.G.S., who by his works on Bohemia, ‘Pictures of Bohemia,’ ‘The Cardinal's Page,’ ‘The Gleaming Dawn,’ &c., has so won the hearts of the Bohemians that he is always warmly welcomed there. When he agreed to pilot a party of English journalists the whole kingdom prepared for their reception in a cultured, learned, and artistic manner and with the warmest hospitality.

The party reached Bohemia via the Hook of Holland and the Elbe. At Prague they were met at the station by the learned Mayor, Dr. Srb, the council, and chief citizens, and great crowds blocked the streets and greeted the visitors with the national cheer, ‘Na Zdar,’ a cheer that was continually to echo in their ears. The whole party, that contained English, Scotch, Irish, and Welsh journalists, were comfortably housed at the Hôtel de Saxe as guests of the city during their stay; and a programme was gone through in the four days' residence in ‘Golden’ Prague that was intensely interesting. The museums astonished all the visitors for their completeness and historic and scientific order and value, and the leader of the party saw, what rarely falls to the lot of a writer, his own work in a museum case, not only in Prague but in other towns, with translations and letters referring to his works.

Special performances were given at the National Cech Theatre, and Professor Sevcik, the famous master of Kubelik and Marie Hall, gave concerts by his pupils, mostly young English girls, proving not only in Prague, where Miss Graham and Mrs. Mitchell played, but at Prachatic and Husinec, where Miss Sherwin, Miss Hayward, and the four Misses Lucas played, that English girls are passionately musical—given the master. At Prague also the home of the great patriot Voitja Naperstek, and his wonderful national museum were visited.

After the four remarkable days at Prague the party travelled in special saloon carriages, luxuriously fitted, provided by the Austrian Ministry of Railways, to various towns, and for three days drove in carriages through village and township, through scenes that were ‘a living in Opera.’ At Kutna Hora an overwhelming reception was given to Mr. James Baker, he having written much on this town; and the scene in the great cathedral when, as the party entered, the great organ pealed forth, and the English visitors were led through the crowded assemblage to the choir steps, and a great choir sang a national chorale, is ineffaceable in the memory of all who were present.

At every town burgomasters and council, governors of the district, and populace were present to greet the visitors and escort them to their hotels in the city or town carriages; the ladies welcomed them by throwing flowers from the windows and handing lovely bouquets to the ladies of the party. Banquets and breakfasts were followed by speeches in many tongues, but mostly in Cech, and in replying Mr. Baker's local knowledge of each district enabled him to give an appropriate response. The quaint historic towns of Tabor, Budojevice, Kolin, Krumlov, and Carlstein with their wondrous castles were visited.

At Husinec, the birthplace of the great reformer John Hus, a little town of 2,000 inhabitants, a remarkable scene was witnessed. The party had walked over the hills from mediæval Prachatic, where Hus went to school, along the picturesque river Blanitz; and near the birthhouse of Hus were drawn up burgomaster, council, and townsfolk, and in warm words they greeted the people from Britain, and referred to the work of Wiclif that had so inspired Hus. In reply Mr. Baker spoke of Hus as not only a Church but a world reformer, and a developer of their history and language. After this historic scene of the reverence of members of the Church of Rome for a great hero of the fourteenth century, the British were to hear the most lovely music from their own countryfolk in the theatre of this remote little town. Especially delightful was the playing of the Misses Lucas quartette, all pupils of Sevcik.

At Pilsen the reception was overwhelmingly hearty; again the town made the party their guests at the Hôtel Waldek. As at other towns the Sokol or gymnastic clubs were visited, where men and women are drilled scientifically to excellent music. Excursions from hence made to the highest point of the Bohemian mountains, Spicak, and to Domazlice, where the peasantry in their brilliant costume gave their national dances, and the choice luncheon was prepared, cooked and served by the young ladies of the town, all members of the cooking and needlework schools; their delicate and artistic dresses of their own handiwork delighting the English ladies.

The intense cultivation of the country—as an Irishman of our party writes of it ‘not a weed to be seen and not an inch of ground uncultivated’—and the quick, alert activity of the peasants impressed deeply the visitors; the freedom of the people and their culture, their love of music of the highest type, of the theatre and dancing, and absence of priestly dominance and of the yet well filled churches, was an absolute revelation to the varied nationalities comprising Mr. Baker's party; and to ensure a learned appreciation of all seen, Prof. Borovsky at Prague and Dr. Maly in the other towns, both men of many tongues and marvellous erudition, acted as guides and interpreters, and thus added immensely to the pleasure and instruction of their guests.

ROSES.

Messrs. Longmans, Green & Co. publish an important and seasonable work entitled ‘The Amateur Gardener's Rose Book,’ by the late Dr. Julius Hoffmann, translated from the German by John Weathers, F.R.H.S., N.R.S. With 20 coloured plates from drawings by Hermann Friese and 16 woodcuts. 8vo., pp. xvi. & 152, price 7*s.* 6*d.* net.

This volume is intended not so much for professional gardeners and nurserymen as for the large number of garden lovers who devote special attention to the cultivation of the rose, the object in view being to enlarge their knowledge on this subject and to produce a book that will serve as a short, practical, and concise adviser.

The subject in all its aspects has, of course, been treated purely from a German gardener's point of view, and with due regard to the more severe winters that prevail in Germany than in this country.

The English rose grower will therefore be able to note the principal differences between some continental methods of cultivation and those generally practised in the United Kingdom; and he may even think it worth while to adopt some of them occasionally. In any case the British gardener, whether amateur or professional, will, in the opinion of the translator, lose nothing by laying aside his proverbial insular prejudice to consider the cultural methods of other nations, even if he come to the conclusion eventually that his own are best.

The ‘Alphabetical List of 300 kinds of Roses’ will, it is believed, be full of interest to every lover of roses, containing as it does brief descriptions of the most popular kinds in cultivation. They have been selected with great care, and brought together, so that the reader may become acquainted with the most important sorts—which are, indeed, to be found in most catalogues, although not more minutely described.

A special feature of the book is the series of 20 coloured plates of roses from drawings by Hermann Friese, the artist, from whose drawings were executed the series of coloured plates in Dr. Hoffmann's book on Alpine Flora.

AMERICAN PAPER TRUST MUST ANSWER QESTIONS.

According to a decision handed down in Milwaukee, Wis., on June 17, by United States Circuit Judge Seaman against the General Paper Company, corporations must submit their books in open court, and officers of corporations must answer relevant questions, when such corporations are sued by the Government, under the anti-trust law, on the charge of operating in restraint of inter-State commerce.

The General Paper Company, sued by the United States to determine whether it was a trust in restraint of trade, contended that most of the questions asked its officers before a master in chancery by Federal attorneys were irrelevant, and refused to submit the company's books. Judge Seaman ruled that the company must show its books to supply possible evidence for the prosecution, and must answer certain questions put by the Federal attorneys.

Attorney James D. Flanders, for the paper company, says the case will be taken to the Circuit Court of Appeals. Pending an appeal the company intends to continue its refusal to answer.

The Government's contentions were all sustained except that it is held that the books which are to be produced under the court's order shall not pass out of the possession of the defendant save in case of pressing need. The decision, if upheld by the higher courts, will have an important and inspiriting bearing on future fights against trusts.

A CHEAP ENGLISH EDITION OF 'SUSAN CLEGG.'

We are glad to find that Messrs. Dean & Son, Ltd., have published a well-got-up and cheap edition of a work which has made a reputation for its author, Anne Warner (Mrs. Anne Warner French), from one end of America to the other.

Humorous stories may roughly be divided into two classes. In the first we have those which recommend themselves by reason of the frank extravagance of their plot and characters; in the second may be placed those which, being the result of close character study, are successful for purely artistic reasons. We suppose most men have met a Susan Clegg in real life; and although they have found her extremely funny, we do not think the living personage would be considered half so humorous as Mrs. Warner's presentment. The reason of this is, that the author of these sketches has, by skilled artistry, emphasised certain points in Susan Clegg's character and subdued others, so that her eccentricity is cleverly exaggerated without in any way making her unrecognisable. In a word, Mrs. Warner has not given us a photograph—she has painted a portrait, though an imaginary one. It is greatly to her credit that the humour (which is often of a spontaneous and irresistible quality) is obtained from incidents in themselves quite ordinary, and indeed stereotyped. A cow that insists on kicking all whom it meets, children and babies of wicked disposition and devilish ingenuity, a lady who proposes marriage to all the eligible bachelors in the neighbourhood—these are not particularly promising materials for humorous sketches; something more than ordinary skill is required to deal with them successfully. This extraordinary skill Mrs. Warner possesses; she also has an eye for character and a very clever pen. The book contains five sketches, each of which is practically a soliloquy from the lips of Susan Clegg. It is true she is supposed to be in conversation with Mrs. Lathrop; but Mrs. Lathrop is very rarely allowed to say more than two words together. Susan is a true product of modern America. She is smart, pushful, and very wide awake. The humour of her talk is entirely unconscious; we doubt even if her friend Mrs. Lathrop ever considered Susan's conversation anything more than highly exciting. As a next-door neighbour during the summer months Susan would have her drawbacks, but we should be well content to put up with them for the sake of her inimitable sayings and her quaint dialect. To quote would be but to do the author a disservice; Susan Clegg's delightful expressions, torn from the context, would lose much of their savour, and the point of her observations would be missed by a reader who knew nothing of the particular circumstance. 'Susan Clegg' is a real holiday book: its humour is fresh, spontaneous, and entirely without malice.

'FIGHTING SHIPS.'

Messrs. Sampson Low, Marston & Co., Ltd., are pleased to announce that the 1905 edition of 'Fighting Ships' will be ready at the end of the present month. The changes in this the eighth annual edition are of a drastic and far-reaching order; capped projectiles and increased velocities have between them effected a revision in naval gunnery. The figures throughout the book have had to be altered to keep pace with these changes. Further, for each value of armour a uniform shading is now used in the plans, and the system of 'the blacker it is the better it is' is followed.

Great changes will be observed in the photographs, the majority of them being taken within four or five months preceding publication. A glance through the book will show that nearly every navy is continually altering the rig of its ships, thus rendering obsolete most of the usually accepted facts.

The 'Fighting Ships' signal code has been completely revised, and, it is hoped, correspondingly simplified.

In Part II. the centre of interest is the Russo-Japanese War: sympathy with one side or the other is totally outside the scope of this book. A general summary is given together with series of special photographs of subjects, few of which have been illustrated before. Some of these photographs are not very exciting, but are of considerable interest technically, as they show clearly enough the trim in which the Japanese ships fought.

The re-appearance of Colonel Cuniberti will be welcomed by all readers. His ideal battleship for the British Navy described in 1903 edition, though criticised as impossible at the time, is now in actual process of being built. His 'Blockade Battleship' will therefore be read with double interest as foreshadowing a type of ship that is likely to be adopted.

To meet the increased expense of enlargement and revision of the book, the price will be raised to 21*s.* net.

MESSRS. W. H. SMITH & SON'S ANNUAL SPORTS.

PICK-UPS

From the New York Publishers' Weekly.

The London Academy asks: 'Have our readers heard the story of the old lady who walked into a shop and asked to buy a "circulating library?"' Inquiry revealed that she wanted a revolving bookcase.

In the last volume of his entertaining 'Notes from a Diary,' Sir Grant Duff tells a story of our doyen among novelists which is good enough to be repeated. Someone wrote to Mr. Howells asking him for a list of the best hundred books. 'I can't name them,' replied the veteran; 'I have not yet written a hundred!'

BURIED TURNERS.

The Pall Mall Press is about to issue as an Art Extra of the Pall Mall Magazine a volume entitled 'Hidden Treasures at the National Gallery,' containing a unique selection of nearly a hundred reproductions of drawings and studies made by Turner at various periods of his strange and romantic career, which for years have been packed away in tin boxes at the National Gallery. They are described by Mr. E. T. Cook, who noted them when making investigations for his great edition of Ruskin's works. His revelations as to the curious condition of neglect in which this remarkable accumulation of 'Buried Turners' had been allowed to lie for fifty years naturally created a deep interest in these precious assets of the nation. It is confidently believed, therefore, that the many exquisite reproductions of them contained in the pages of this volume, and now published for the first time, will make a wide appeal to the artistic world, to which they have, of course, hitherto been inaccessible. The examples reproduced show the great painter at all stages of his career, from the comparative crudities of his youth to the inspired creations of his maturer years; and all his styles are represented.

UNKNOWN BOOKS.

A collection of unknown or lost books, discovered in different monastic libraries, is offered for sale by W. M. Voynich for 4,000 guineas. Public institutions will be allowed a substantial discount.

The collection represents:

1. 160 works printed between 1476 and 1698 in England, France, Germany, Italy, Spain, Switzerland, Iceland, Poland.
2. An English XVI. Cent. binding having an unknown portrait of Queen Elizabeth stamped on both sides.
3. A MS. Magellan map of the world drawn on vellum in Spain immediately after the return of the Vittoria in 1522, showing the earliest known example of the employment of the equidistant polar projection.

All these works are unknown to bibliographers, and researches have proved that no public or private libraries, with printed catalogues of their collections, possess any of the books. An illustrated catalogue of the collection, in two parts, can be had for 5*s.* post-free, from Mr. W. M. Voynich, 63 Shaftesbury Avenue, W.

TRADE CHANGES.

Mr. G. Fowler, lately representing Mr. T. Yardley, has been appointed country traveller by Messrs. Alf. Cooke, Ltd., of Leeds, who are about to publish a very fine series of juvenile and toy books, and will commence his duties with them very shortly.

Messrs. W. & R. Holmes, of Dunlop Street, Glasgow, to accommodate their increasing business, have just opened a branch 'Central Book Warehouse, in commodious premises at 47–51 Argyle Street for the sale of high-class general literature.

BEST BOOK LISTS.

Re Article 'Lord Acton's Best Books.'

Sir,—There has recently been so many adverse opinions expressed in the matter of 'Lists of Books' that one feels it necessary to defend the system somewhat. Of course when people have more or less studied literature they fancy they are in the state of not requiring any other guidance. Be that as it may, certainly less favoured persons are very glad to avail themselves of various lists for guidance.

What would one think of a Londoner who, instead of guiding his country friend to the interesting and historical sight in London, left him in the middle of Cheapside, saying: 'It is all so good that you need no guide.' How much more will the untutored reader be at sea in the midst of our vast English literature without a guide?

The learned forget that there are many thousands who are still in the state that they used to be in, not knowing who ranks as the greater, Milton or Byron, Chaucer or Campbell, or again they might not be aware of the name of the author of 'Ecce Homo!' and so on.

Personally, I have been very thankful to the various guides in the form of lists and handbooks which are obtainable for the use of beginners and students; the hours and days which have been saved by them is enormous.

May I ask, however, referring to the article quoted above, where can I find Lord Acton's List? In spite of your adverse remarks, I intend to have the list for reference. Of course no list is perfect, everyone must be the impress of the selector's individuality, which makes it more valuable to some of us.—Your obedient servant,

Goodmayes, Ilford. J. Kemp.

THE FIRST EDITION OF THE RUBÁIYÁT.

Sir,—The following about this volume, which has already become one of the greatest book-rarities of our time, is from a hitherto unpublished letter from Edward Fitzgerald to Professor Cowell which appears in the Life of the latter recently published by Macmillan & Co.; and as it throws a new light on the matter, you might like to put it on record in your pages, which are eagerly read by so many members of the trade. It has usually been supposed that the late Mr. Quaritch got rid of his entire stock by pricing them at one penny each and placing them in the box outside his shop-door. Of course, both stories may have truth in them. I have often peered into that box; but, unfortunately for me, I arrived in London just too late (1875) to catch an original Omar there.

Fitzgerald writes under date July 8, 1870, à propos of a very favourable notice of the second edition of the volume in Fraser: 'Quaritch perhaps will hope that he may sell a few of the eighteenpenny copies in consequence; having wondered from the first that I did not stir up someone to do that friendly office. By the bye, he sent me, of his own accord, a funny account of what he calls the "disappearance" of the first edition, which was bought up, he says, by the editor of the Saturday Review (Wilks?), who (at a penny apiece) gave them to friends. Why he did not say so much in his paper I don't know.' Lucky friends! Prescient editor! James Drummond.

Crediton, N.B.: July 5, 1905.

WHAT CAN BE DONE?

Sir,—I am one of those having standing advertisements for 'Books Wanted' in the Publishers' Circular, and I have generally had very satisfactory results.

But on June 21 I received a letter signed 'E. Brown,' and dated from 9 Maiden Lane, London, W.C., offering me a book I had advertised for—price 4*s.* 6*d.* I at once sent the 4*s.* 6*d.* to E. Brown at the address given, but got no book nor acknowledgment of the postal order.

I then reported the case to the authorities at New Scotland Yard. They find that the address given by E. Brown is only the address for his letters, that he has not been there since the 24th ult., and that there are postcards waiting there for him which demand the moneys sent to him without the equivalent being given by him. Those who carry on business at the address named know nothing whatever of E. Brown beyond the facts that when calling for his letters he was always well dressed, and was a man of about fifty years of age. His post card to me offering the book appeared to be written by an educated man.

Have others of your readers had similar experiences, I wonder?

July 11, 1905. Inquirer.

Could any of your numerous readers give me any information about E. Brown, late of 9 Maiden Lane, London, W.C.? If so, would they kindly communicate with the undersigned.—C. A. Streicher, York.

Why Homer Nodded.—'Pangborn is always making those classical allusions. What did he mean by saying that even Homer nods?' 'Eh? Oh, Yes. You see, Homer was blind, and so they never could tell when he was asleep until he nodded. All those classical things are simple enough when you understand 'em—Cleveland Plain Dealer.

Notices of Books

From Mr. George Allen.—'Bird Life Glimpses,' by Edmund Selous. In reading his Preface one has a feeling that the author is offering a kind of apology for this book; we can assure him that it is quite unnecessary. The book is charmingly written, and certainly to a lover of the country, which must mean, we presume, a love for, and an interest in, bird life, there is not a dull page from beginning to end. Perhaps to those who have studied the habits of birds there is no very new discovery herein, but to the many there are many things which either they have failed, or have not had the opportunity, to notice, and to all, the charm of the author's method must certainly appeal. If there is a fault to be found it is, that the author sometimes presupposes too much knowledge in his readers, but he can hardly be taken to task for this. We must not hold him responsible for our ignorance, and it is certain that the more you know about the bird life of our countryside the more you will enjoy these glimpses.

From the same.—'G. F. Watts, Reminiscences,' by Mrs. Russell Barrington, with five illustrations in colour and numerous other illustrations. The writer of these reminiscences, herself an artist, lived for many years next door to the subject of this work, and talked with him almost daily on the work in hand, whether painting or sculpture, besides being in constant correspondence with him. For obvious reasons it is too soon to give that correspondence to the public, but in the book before us we have a striking and vivid picture of the artist, the high aims he put before him, and his curious diffidence and self-distrust. This book is not so much a 'Life' of Watts as a series of portraits illustrating his genius and disposition. The volume is illustrated with many hitherto unpublished portraits and drawings reproduced in colour, photogravure, and half-tone, with some facsimiles of handwriting.

From Messrs. William Blackwood & Sons.—'The World's Childhood: Stories of the Fairies simply related for Young Children,' by M. B. Synge. This is a delightful collection of tales for the juveniles, embracing such old and well-tried favourites as 'Little Red Riding Hood,' 'The Three Bears,' 'Puss in Boots,' 'The Ugly Duckling,' 'Jack and the Beanstalk,' 'Cinderella,' 'Beauty and the Beast,' 'Tom Thumb,' 'Jack the Giant Killer,' &c. Whether the majority quite realise the popular idea of 'fairy stories' is perhaps open to question, but they are all admirably told, with a simplicity that is certain to win the hearts of young readers; and they also have the attraction of numerous capital illustrations. A further recommendation is that the print is large and clear.

From Messrs. Burns & Oates, Ltd.—'Reminiscences of an Oblate of St. Charles,' by the Rev. Francis J. Kirk. This little work was written in obedience to the request of the late Cardinal Vaughan that the author would write a 'history of the Oblates in Bayswater, work done in the nineteenth century.' The author deals in an interesting way which St. Mary of the Angels, Bayswater; St. Mary of the Holy Souls, Kensal; St. Francis' Church and Mission, Notting Hill; St. Charles' College; St. Peter and St. Edward, Westminster; and the Sisters of Charity.

From the Cambridge University Press.—'The Lands of the Eastern Caliphate; Mesopotamia, Persia, and Central Asia, from the Moslem Conquest to the Time of Timur,' by G. Le Strange. This work forms the new volume of the Cambridge Geographical series. Its author has devoted much care and research to its inception in order to make the book a sufficiently erudite contribution to the celebrated series named. He has also striven to put into 'convenient compass' the information garnered from the works of various Moslem writers. In his introductory chapter we have an excellent summary of matters bearing upon the nearer East during the middle ages, while the succeeding sections are concerned with the development of the historio-geographical features of the various countries, as well as distinct details of the trades and manufactures appertaining to each district. Mr. Le Strange modestly declares his work only to be that of a first attempt in directing the reader's attention to an important branch of ethnological science. As such, however, it occupies a foremost position as a work of reference, in the production of which he has been ably assisted both in the printing and also contribution thereto of many good and elucidatory maps.

From Messrs. Cassell & Co., Ltd.—'Microscopes and Accessories: How to Make and Use Them,' edited by Paul N. Hasluck. This is one of the serviceable 'Work Handbooks,' chiefly made up of articles that have appeared in that excellent periodical. It contains in a clear and intelligible form much practical information relating to microscopes and their accessories, and its value is greatly enhanced by the presence of numerous engravings and diagrams. Those who desire to be instructed in the details of microscopy could scarcely do better than make application to its pages.

From Messrs Chapman & Hall, Ltd.—'Poverty Bay,' Illustrated by Harry Furniss and written by the Artist. First of all, this is a picture book of which we shall not soon tire. Our first thought, perhaps, is to wonder how all these pictures, so diverse in subject, can illustrate one and the same book; and that reveals to us possibly the author's reason for writing a dream instead of an ordinary novel. 'Poverty Bay' is the place to which drift unsuccessful geniuses and the unfortunate but deserving, who have given up the struggle and resigned themselves to a peaceful if stagnant ending. To this spot the narrator, who is a cynical young man about town of the most uninteresting description, is carried by a fluke, and by a series of incidents is shaken up into taking an interest in those about him and becomes at last a person whom one woman at least manages to love, and to whom the inhabitants as a body feel grateful. He does nothing whatever to deserve this happy ending, but then dreams are always a bit inconsequential, and it is to this characteristic that we owe the delightful diversity of the drawings. Some may be simply charming pictures, as that of the Sailors' Rest; others are weird, as the headless man—where our dream has for a time become a veritable nightmare; grave and gay, sober and humorous, they form a picture gallery to enjoy, and to be enjoyed most when one has dreamt with the author to the end. Few can tell a dream so as to interest others, but the reader of this book will enter thoroughly into the spirit of dreamland. It is a book to enjoy, quaint and amusing, full of people who live, full of sentiment and of the oddest humour, yet first and last a picture gallery of our dreams.

From Messrs. Chatto & Windus.—'Macaulay's England,' Vols. 3 and 4, have now been added to their Library. Vol. 5 will complete Macaulay. Mr. Justin McCarthy's Histories will follow on in uniform style—so making a complete History of England from the earliest times to the present.

From Messrs. William Collins, Sons & Co., Ltd.—'Collins' Wide World Geography Reader, Book IX.—The World.' Nowadays the illustrations are of such great importance in any work appealing to young people that we may be forgiven if in the present instance we mention them first. The volume contains no fewer than sixty-three coloured photographs and ten coloured maps, and though the former of these scarcely warrants the publishers' epithet of 'superb,' they are yet sufficiently well produced in effective contrasts to inspire the admiration of readers who have not yet arrived at a knowledge of the more artistic combinations in colour. The letterpress on the whole is well written, necessary care being devoted to clearness of diction, and a commendable feature is the attention paid to the home life and chief occupations of the inhabitants of the various countries, as 'such information tends to give reality to the lands described, to excite a desire to know more about them, and to impress on the memory many geographical facts.'—We have also received from the same publishers Books I. and II. of the 'Junior Wide World Reader' in the 'Graphic School Series.' Like the preceding volume they are embellished with coloured pictures, in addition to the ordinary black and white illustrations, and are, speaking generally, well adapted for school use.

From Messrs. Archibald Constable & Co., Ltd.—'Isidro,' by Mary Austin. Illustrations in colour by Eric Pape. Not a bad tale of Old Mexico, dealing with the adventures of a young Spaniard intended for the priesthood and the lost daughter of the Commandante of the province. One gets a very fair idea of the various classes living under Spanish rule not so very long ago, the power still principally in the hands of the priests, who put the glory of their Church before everything. So long, however, as that is protected, they give very real protection and comfort to the natives who have been converted. Some of the adventures of Isidro with the villain Mascado are exciting, and the forest fire is well told. The book is apparently printed in America, and we hope that Miss Austin's next book may be set up in this country.

From the same.—'Monarch, the Big Bear of Tallac,' with 100 drawings by Ernest Thompson Seton. This is the life history of a bear told by probably the best writer of this class of natural history stories. The principal incidents in a bear's life are told with a simplicity and attractiveness that charm the reader; to a boy no book could be more attractive, and we do not wonder that this author's natural history stories rival in popularity the best read children's books.

From Messrs. Archibald Constable & Co., Ltd.—'Steam Boilers: their History and Development,' by H. H. P. Powles, A.M.Inst. C.E., M.I.M.E. This important work is of considerable historic and scientific value. The first part treats of the history of steam boilers from the earliest times down to the period when several useful types had become persistent. In tracing the development of the steam boiler from the earliest known examples down to the most modern specimens, Mr. Powles has made no attempt to achieve the impossible by including in his work every variety which has been either made or proposed. As far as possible, however, a characteristic example of each type has been described and illustrated, original contemporary works having been consulted for descriptions, figures, &c. He has spared no pains in obtaining information; indeed, his book is a monument of patient research and unflagging enthusiasm. His text includes a number of general remarks on boiler-making and on the performance of different types in practice, and the last chapter deals with the important subject of corrosion. In addition to the 180 illustrations in the text, a series of excellent plates are given showing the various types of boilers grouped together, to assist in following out the evolution of each type. Mr. Powles has a good sound style, and his work is probably the finest that has yet been issued dealing with this department of practical science.

From the same.—'The First Romanovs, 1613–1725,' by R. Nisbet Bain. Mr. Nisbet Bain, a profound student of Russian life and literature, has done English readers a great service in writing this deeply moving history. He has described the social, ecclesiastical, and political conditions of Eastern Europe from 1613 to 1725, and has traced the gradual transformation during the seventeenth century of the semi-monastic, semi-barbarous Tsardom of Muscovy into the modern Russian State. The century which divides the age of Ivan the Great from Peter the Great abounds in singular contradictions and picturesque contrasts. 'Throughout this period, East and West, savagery and civilisation, strive incessantly for the mastery, and sinister and colossal shapes, fit representatives of wildly contending elemental forces, flit phantasmagorically across the dirty ways of the twilight scene.' The volume is well illustrated and indexed, and will remain a standard work for some time to come. Mr. Nisbet Bain is master of a style at once graphic and vigorous, and he pictures he draws make indelible impressions on the mind.

From Mr. C. W. Daniel.—'Babylonian Religion,' by Wm. Loftus Hare. This is the latest volume of the author's 'World's Religions Series,' a very useful series indeed, and one which we can thoroughly recommend, with this reservation only that we do not commit ourselves to all the author's opinions. The history of the Babylonians and the Assyrians, whether secular or religious, must have a very profound interest for modern thinkers; and their legendary lore is no doubt in touch with the deep-set heart of true religion. That so called legends similar to the Old Testament stories have existed, as it would seem quite apart from the Bible narrative, is a proof of the fundamental truth, and do not constitute an adverse criticism as some labour so incessantly to show. As a concise account of the subject this little book is valuable.

From the same.—'Starved into Surrender,' by Allen Clarke. This is an ingenious tale of the surrender of England fallen a victim to the wiles of Russia. Utter destruction is thwarted by the interposition of one Servi, a mysterious and, we imagine, a supernatural personage. We are not among those who with blatant jingoism and self-satisfaction exalt ourselves and despise our enemies, but we hardly think England would have been caught napping to quite the extent that is here depicted. Servi, however, saves us and makes new laws for us, the fundamental principle of which is to have nothing to do with Imperialism. England for the English, no Empire, and mind our own business, is the sermon underneath the story, which is rather clever, and no doubt contains some useful lessons.

From Messrs. J. M. Dent & Co.—'Russian History,' by A. S. Rappoport, Ph.D. No doubt it is difficult in small space, such as this work entails, to write a primer of Russian history, and the author must perforce content himself with the narration of crude facts, without any of the deductions which are so dear to the mind of the earnest student. Dr. Rappoport seems to have felt this in undertaking this volume of the 'Temple Primers,' but indeed there is no necessity for excuse. The book is most capably written, considering the opportunities at the author's disposal, and within its limits it admirably treats of the subject laid under examination.

From the same.—'Chronicles of the City of Perugia: 1492—1503,' by Francesco Matarazzo. Translated by Edward Strachan Morgan. The story of Perugia, as told by Francesco Matarazzo, is one of the most fascinating of mediæval chronicles. 'As we turn over his pages, the life of old Perugia palpitates before us . . . . Without visible effort, he keeps in due relief the essential points of his story, and manages his mass of detail with an instinctive skill that always keeps his exuberant fancy in due bounds.' Certain it is, he is a story-teller of great ability, and his style has a persuasive charm not often met with in ancient chronicles. The translation is excellently done, and the book is very well got up for the small price asked for it.

From the same.—'Life of Michael Bruce,' by James Mackenzie, M.P.S., F.S.A.S., &c., with a Preface by Oliphant Smeaton. The subject of this memoir was famous in his day as the 'Poet of Loch Leven, and much of whose poetry contains tender and genuine pictures of Scottish life in the neighbourhood of Kinnesswood, the place of his birth. The author, in his interesting biography, relates with candour the career of the gifted poet, and the many letters written by and to Bruce testify to the warm regard in which he was held throughout his brief but distinguished life, for he died in the twenty-second year of his age. The book also bears special reference to the unsolved literary problem as to whether Bruce or John Logan wrote the famous 'Ode to the Cuckoo,' duly accompanied by copies of letters written by the latter poet, and now published for the first time. Many illustrations of the localities mentioned adorn the volume.

From the same.—'The Working Constitution of the United Kingdom and its Outgrowths,' by Leonard Courtney. This volume of 'The Temple Primers' Series is an adaptation of a previous work on the same subject published in 1901. The necessary reduction in size has been brought about by the omission of the historical portions and of the account given of local government, the land laws, education, &c., in Part II. of the larger book. In one or two instances the chapters have been condensed, whilst, on the other hand, the portions dealing with civil departments, protectorates, and chartered companies have been expanded. As now reconstructed and arranged the little volume may be praised as an able and concisely written treatise on an important subject.

From Mr. Henry S. Drane.—'Stories and Essays,' by Kate Scanlen. The contents of this book are well adapted for holiday time. The stories are not long, they are uncommon, and also sufficiently interesting, notably that of 'Pickles,' a touching incident of a child lover, while in 'The Witch Doctor' and 'The Mysterious Figure' the reader is made acquainted with some strange aspects of native South African life.

From the same.—'Marraquitta: a Romance of Monte Carlo,' by Charlotte Wales-Almy. In this dramatically conceived novel we have a fresh recital of the oft-repeated story of woman's love and devotion for 'mere man' and its consequent futile requital. The heroine is an Italian girl whom John Cradock, an American millionaire, meets at a 'praying place for peasants' among the hills of the Riviera. He is enamoured with her beauty and saintly devotion. They become affianced lovers, and Cradock lavishly spends his money upon her. However, a separation ensues, owing to his dissolute behaviour. After many years Marraquitta obtains fame and fortune on the Parisian stage, and is beloved for her many charities and exemplary life. The development of the story up to its tragic close is creditably done, and displays much skill in plot-weaving by its author.

From Messrs. Duckworth & Co.—'Napoleon's Love Story, an Historical Romance,' by Waclow Gasiorowski, translated by Count de Soissons. The translator of this book states that its Polish author 'has already achieved a position as a very able master of historical romance, and is besides an enthusiastic admirer of Napoleon Buonaparte.' This is apparent in the novel before us, relative in a great measure to the infatuation shown by the Emperor for Madame Marie Walewska, a noble and beautiful Polish lady, during his protracted stay in Warsaw. The lady is not averse to the attachment, which grows from the time when, in her sledge, she has the 'never-to-be-forgotten' interview outside the inn at Jablonna with her 'hero who challenged the immortality of Alexander the Great and Cæsar.' The interest of the story never flags until it reaches the pathetic close, and throughout the author favours us with many graphic pen pictures of Court, military, and domestic life during that portion of the Napoleonic period. The varied characters to be found in close association with the action are also drawn with a true perception of their value in this absorbing contribution to historic fiction.

From the same.—'The Tyrol,' by W. D. McCrackan. English readers are already familiar with the former books by this author relative to Alpine territory. The one now before us we have read with a great deal of pleasure, for Mr. McCrackan is an exhilarating writer on this subject, and seldom fails to convey his enthusiasm to his readers. We therefore gain from this volume a good knowledge of the 'Fair Land Tyrol,' its people, their habits, dress, pursuits, and hospitable traits, that go far to render travelling throughout that invigorating and picturesque region 'a joy for ever.' Those portions of his book in which the author descants of the great Emperor, Maximilian the First, a contemporary and ally of our Henry the Eighth; of 'Andreas Hofer,' the Tyrolean patriot and his heroic struggles; of 'Walther von der Vogelweide,' the gifted Minnesinger; as well as that relative to 'Dante in the Trentino,' will be appreciated by the historical and literary student. We cordially commend the volume, which is copiously illustrated from photographs, to those who are contemplating a holiday tour in this portion of Europe.

From Messrs. R. A. Everett & Co.—'Purple and White: a Romance,' by Henry Byatt. It has seldom been our lot to read such a vivid novel as this. It relates to the career of a mythical Prince Heinrich, son of a powerful potentate and heir to the greatest Empire in the world during the second half of the twentieth century. The prince, who from his striking resemblance of feature is thus enabled to fulfil the dual rôle of 'master smith of a quaint forest forge' as well as the 'Majesty of Germany,' soon becomes the moving spirit of a series of veritable phantasmagoric events and adventures. Space prevents us from mentioning the marvellous incidents with which this imaginative romance abounds, and we can but refer the reader to its pages, who we feel sure will not easily forget them after once having read it throughout.

From Mr. L. Upcott Gill.—'Choice Ferns for Amateurs,' by George Schneider. This volume ir an abridgment of a larger work of the same author, and should meet the wants of that very large number to whom the former book could only appeal in a restricted sense. Every point with regard to the management and culture of ferns, whether in the open or under glass, would seem to be considered here and very fully discussed; and the amateur is hardly likely to come across any difficulty which he may not solve by a reference to these pages. The book is very fully illustrated.

From Messrs. Greening & Co., Ltd.—'A Marriage in Burmah,' by Mrs. M. Chan-Toon. The question which forms the basis of this novel—the indignities and hardships endured by an English woman of refinement and education who marries a native of India—has frequently been utilised in fiction, and it can hardly be said that Mrs. Chan-Toon makes the best use of her opportunities. But one charm the book has, that it is thoroughly natural, and conveys a far more convincing impression of the actual state of affairs than a work more cleverly written would possess. Regarded from this point of view, 'A Marriage in Burmah' will powerfully interest the reader, and the painful experiences of Mrs. Moung Gyaw will elicit sympathy. All the same, one cannot but wonder had the wily scheming Eurasian met with a more suitable wife—one, that is to say, less uncompromisingly honest—what the result would have been. How they ever forgathered in the first instance is a mystery. The story includes several clever but rather sketchy studies of character.

From the same.—'A Doctor in Corduroy,' by Max Baring. We are again indebted to this author for some enjoyable time in the perusal of this fresh story from his pen. There is a humorous tone and treatment, as in his previous novels, while at the same time it bears evidence of careful manipulation in character drawing. Dr. John, who appears throughout the narrative, is portrayed with dramatic power, and the reader will find the book a good specimen of current fiction.

From Messrs. Hodder & Stoughton.—'Our Lord and His Bible,' by the Rev. H. E. Fox, M.A. An alternative title to this volume is suggested by the author himself—'What did Jesus Christ think of the Old Testament?' He seeks to demolish much of the higher criticism by showing that whatever learned men may surmise regarding the personages and events of the Old Testament, Jesus Christ witnessed many times to the truth of its various books. If the reader accepts part of pages 21 and 22, he must in common fairness acknowledge that the author proves his case; but will so many accept the basis of the argument as Mr. Fox imagines? We doubt it.

From the same.—'Maid Margaret,' by S. R. Crockett. This sequel to 'The Black Douglas' is one of the best stories that the author has written. Maid Margaret is the Fair Maid of Galloway whose brothers were judicially murdered, and whose husband was killed by the King's own hand. The reader gets thoroughly to know several of the characters, and the story works out logically and is full of interest. Maud Lindsay and her husband Sholto perhaps take our attention and love most, but Margaret's first husband and, towards the end of the book, Malise M'Kim, the fine old armourer, are both powerful personalities.

From The Homeland Association, Ltd.—'Horsham and St. Leonard's Forest,' by W. Goodliffe, M.A. These Homeland Handbooks are very attractively written, and are something more than what is usually understood by a guide. Nowadays it is not uncommon for people to know a good deal about the Continent, and, comparatively speaking, nothing about their own country. The accessibility of all parts of the country to the motor will no doubt alter this in the near future, and this series, published for the purpose of encouraging touring in Great Britain, is of practical utility. The present volume is very interesting, and contains a specially written chapter on Christ's Hospital.

From Messrs. Iliffe & Sons, Ltd.—'The Gum-Bichromate Process,' by J. Cruwys Richards ('Photography' Bookshelf Series, No. 20). This process has been in existence for some years; but, owing to inadequate knowledge of its manipulation, and the numerous failures which must inevitably result from first attempts, it is only quite recently that it has received serious attention. It is, briefly described, a method of producing photographic pictures in a water-colour pigment, the principle of production being the well-known hardening action of a bichromate salt on glue, starch, gelatine, gum, or any other colloid substance exposed to light. In an introductory chapter Mr. Richards supplies some interesting facts relating to the history of the invention, and next proceeds to treat in turn of the details of the process, the materials used, the working of the 'single' prints, multiple printing, printing in colours, and so forth. The book is illustrated with numerous examples both of finished prints and of the same prints at various earlier stages, and in this way an excellent idea of the value of the process is afforded. It is certainly a volume that all photographers, both professional and amateur, should read.

From the same.—'The Hand Camera,' by W. L. F. Wastell and R. Child Bayley. The modern hand camera is made in many varieties; in twenty-five years it has developed from an apparatus 'which might be used in the hand' to one which, from every point of view, is wellnigh perfect. The guide of Messrs. Wastell and Bayley is thorough and reliable; it deals with modern hand cameras of all types, and gives full instructions for all those forms of photographic work which involve the use of a hand camera or follow from its employment.

From Messrs. T. C. & E. C. Jack.—'French by the Direct Method,' adapted from the German of Rossman and Schmidt by Thomas Cartwright, B.A., B.Sc. Part II. ('Jack's Language Series'). Messrs. Rossman and Schmidt's work has for several years enjoyed a wide reputation on the Continent, where it has attained the honour of a twentieth edition, and the thanks of all those interested in the better cultivation of modern languages in this country are due to Mr. Cartwright for thus bringing the book in a suitable form before English readers. The method of teaching employed is the natural (or direct) method, the foundation of which is intuition—the source and origin, according to the authors, of all higher knowledge. Grammar is minimised to the extent of including only its more important principles, and an endeavour has been made to present the verb, that terror of all students, in the simplest possible way. The volume, which contains several illustrations, a phonetic script, and an ample vocabulary, is well worthy of the attention of teachers and their pupils.

From the same.—'Our Island's Story: British History Simply Told,' by William Bond, B.A. ('Jack's Concentric Histories, Step Two'). Mr. Bond takes up the history of Britain from its earliest beginnings, and in simple, unpedantic language traces its course down to the present day. He lays just emphasis on the heroic deeds of the nation, seeing that these are the portions which are more likely to interest young readers; but in no portion does he obtrude one series of episodes at the expense of another, the book being very well balanced. There are both coloured and plain illustrations.—Messrs. Jack have also sent us 'Graphs of Algebraical Functions of the First and Second Degrees,' by W. Mudie, F.E.L.S., in their 'Mathematical Series,' and Book III. of 'The Three Term Algebra,' by C. W. Crook, B.A., B.Sc., and W. H. Weston, B.A., the latter work treating of simultaneous and quadratic equations with problems involving the same, equations solvable like, quadratics, square root, &c. We have further to acknowledge 'Our English Home,' by C. W. Crook, B.A., and W. H. Weston, B.A., the first of a series of 'Geographical Handbooks' which promise, judging from this issue, to be a distinct success.

From Messrs. Lawrence & Bullen, Ltd.—'The Saint Lawrence Basin,' by Samuel Edward Dawson, Litt.D., F.R.S.C. By publishing the 'Story of Exploration' series Messrs. Lawrence & Bullen are doing a public service of no small magnitude; the last volume, like its predecessors, is written by a scholar and an enthusiast, and no trouble or expense has been spared to make it perfect in every way. The text, the illustrations and maps, and the general get-up of the book are worthy of the subject. Dr. Dawson writes with luminosity and exactness; even the lay reader will peruse his work with increasing interest, for the story he has to tell is brimful of illuminating and suggestive incident.

From Mr. John Long.—'The Rook's Nest,' by G. W. Appleton. Those readers who are conversant with the stories of crime and mystery related by those gifted writers Edgar Allan Poe and Wilkie Collins will find in this new novel from a well-known author the same familiar skill evinced in the developement of an intricate plot. It is a transcript of certain phases of London life, and appertains to certain marvellous and mysterious events connected with Edward Lart, an Oxford B.A., who once held the position of private secretary to a Mr. Golightly, alias Lord Romer. The combination of circumstances arising from this dual impersonation on the part of his employer, in which the innocent secretary becomes frequently involved, chiefly in the robbery of a parcel of French bonds, are vividly described. The various characters appearing throughout the story, and their interplay, heighten its dramatic action, while the dénouement is reached by a well devised tragedy. The novel is sure to find favour with patrons of good solid fiction.

From Messrs. Longmans, Green & Co.—'Glenanaar, a Story of Irish Life,' by the Very Rev. Canon P. A. Sheehan, D.D. There is an attraction about Canon Sheehan's work not altogether easy to define. It certainly does not lie in the adroit dramatic arrangement of his material so much as in the sympathetic intimate acquaintance he displays with Irish character. Over the children of his imagination—though here and there several beings of real existence appear, and the main events treated of are matters of history—he lingers with an affectionate touch which is certain to extend its pleasurable influence to the reader. The book is replete with warm, generous colouring from first page to last, and by those who care for natural studies of character rather than crude sensationalism or artificial excursions into the morbid it should be warmly appreciated.

From Messrs. Macmillan & Co., Ltd.—'Norway and the Union with Sweden,' by Fridtjof Nansen. Many well-read Englishmen have but a vague notion of the causes of the differences which have reached such a critical point in the relations between Norway and Sweden; indeed, completely to understand them, it is necessary 'to know something of the earlier history of the two peoples, and the circumstances under which the Union between them came to be established and under which it has developed.' Without in any way claiming to write anything new or original, the author has given us a concise and authentic account of the most important circumstances and events which have led up to the present crises. The volume is short, pithy, and scrupulously fair.

From the same. — 'Edward Fitzgerald,' by A. C. Benson. The inclusion of Fitzgerald in the 'English Men of Letters Series' being inevitable, we may say at once that this volume fulfils its purpose. In the 'Lives' which have been published, and in his 'Letters and Literary Remains,' everything that can be said has been said, and the present is a boiled down résumé from all these. The author's task was not an easy one, for Fitzgerald's life was not particularly interesting, and probably the lives of half the men one meets in the street would furnish more material for biography than his. We are not disputing the mark he has left upon his age—that were futile—but at the same time we think it quite a debatable point whether the cult of his Omar Khayyám has not been run to death. To listen to some, one would imagine that there was little, perhaps nothing, to equal it in the language, whereas, were there not a spirit of indefiniteness abroad to-day, it is very doubtful if its vogue would have been anything like so great as it is. Does it not appeal irresistibly to the indifference and unbelief of a self-conscious and youthful generation in much the same manner as Byron's passionate and unhappy moods appealed to the imaginative youth of his day?

From Messrs. E. Marlborough & Co.—'Der Englische Dolmetscher mit Englischer Aussprache (Methode Thimm),' neubearbeitet und erweitert von W. von Knoblauch ('Marlborough's English Self Taught for the Germans'). The English language is admittedly one of the most difficult in the world to learn, but we quite think this little work will aid our Teutonic neighbours in its accomplishment. At least it will enable them to become familiar with the more ordinary words used in conversation or associated with domestic life, commercial and trading terms, naval and military titles, post-office distinctions, &c. The book is framed somewhat after the fashion of the same publishers' 'Self Taught' Series for English tourists and travellers, and is equally useful.

From Mr. John Murray.—'The Rudiments of Practical Mathematics,' by A. Consterdine, M.A., and A. Barnes, M.A. ('Murray's School Library'). The method adopted throughout this exceedingly useful manual (designed for the use of pupils over twelve years of age) is that the materials used for calculation shall be derived for the most part from reasonably accurate measurements made by each student for himself, and that these measurements shall, as far as possible, be measurements of actual objects selected for the purpose. The practical basis thus laid down for the book is therefore excellent, and has been adhered to with thorough fidelity and complete success. No better work could be prescribed for the junior or backward student, and in all respects he will find most serviceable guidance at the hands of the authors. Numerous diagrams are included.

From the same.—'The Life of Christ: a Continuous Narrative in the Words of the Authorised Version of the Four Gospels,' with Introduction and Notes by Joseph John Scott, M.A. Canon Scott tells us in his Preface to this volume that he has been impelled to its publication by the circumstance that for some time his attention has been constantly directed to the fact that many students and teachers are becoming afraid of the inroads on the Bible made by modern criticism, and shaken in their belief in its reliability. His work, therefore, is to be looked upon as an attempt to assist such waverers. It has taken the form of a diatessaron or harmony of the Gospels, with an Introduction. The latter gives a summary of the conclusions on the criticism of the Gospels which are accepted by the best English scholars. A useful index of passages is included, which will enable the book to be used as a commentary on the several Gospels, and there are also an Index of Subjects and a General Index. At the end is a map of Palestine. A prominent feature of the book, which can scarcely fail to impress all readers, is the painstaking care shown in the work, and the convincing skill with which the author has marshalled his facts.

From Mr. Eveleigh Nash.—'The Passenger from Calais,' by Major Arthur Griffiths. We always expect a good detective story from Major Griffiths, and once again we are not disappointed. Instead of hunting down a crime in the usual style, the detectives here are of the private variety, and are engaged in tracking down a baby who has been run away with by his maternal aunt, after the courts have given him into the custody of the father. The turns and twists and doublings of the infant, sometimes in the charge of his aunt and at other times in that of his mother, aided and abetted by a smart young military man in love with the aunt, and the misadventures of the two detectives and their patron, Lord Blackadder, are most amusing; the fun is fast and furious, until at length the excited and wrathful parent drops in an apoplectic fit, and the hunt is over.

From Thomas Nelson & Sons, Paternoster Row.—Messrs. Nelson & Sons, have added to their sixpenny classics Charles Kingsley's 'Hypatia.' This volume contains 474 pages on the usual thin paper, and is handsomely bound—all for sixpence net! It is too cheap.

From Messrs. George Newnes, Ltd.—'Drawings of Albrecht Dürer.' Little requires to be said about this volume, except that the drawings are exceedingly well produced, supplying a vivid impression of the artist's skill, and that an interesting Introduction has been contributed by Professor Hans W. Singer, which will certainly increase the reader's appreciation of Dürer's marvellous powers. The artistic perception of the nation would seem to be steadily advancing, if one may judge from the large number of art volumes now published, and in this advance the publications of Messrs. Newnes are playing a prominent part.

From the same.—'The Story of Reptile Life,' by W. P. Pycraft, F.Z.S. This is a little work, but packed within its two hundred and odd pages is a mass of information relating to reptile life that should render its cordial reception by the lovers of natural history a matter of no uncertainty. Admirable printing, good paper, and numerous illustrations alike contribute their quota to the success of the volume, and it may fairly be pronounced one of the best in a long series of popular manuals.

From Mr. David Nutt.—'Gubbio, Past and Present,' by Laura McCracken. Illustrated by Katharine McCracken. We have reason to believe that this book is the first published in England which deals with the historical and beautiful city of Gubbio in Italy. Gubbio lies off the beaten track of tourists; it has been little visited, and few even among educated people have anything but a vague idea of its geographical position. Miss Laura McCracken's little volume will probably induce many English tourists to pay it a visit; its historical records are, unfortunately, few and scanty, but to visitors from newer worlds and to lovers of antiquity 'the unchanged mediæval aspect of the city must ever prove an unfailing attraction.' The author has wisely sought to render it easy for her readers to find the various monuments and places of interest by presenting them rather with regard to the sequence of their position than from the point of view of historical or artistic merit. The book is the work of a cultured lady of more than average attainments, and the drawings of Miss Katharine McCracken are of excellent quality.

From the same.—'Mister Dormouse, and other Verses for Children,' by Geraldine M. Seymour. Verses for children require the greatest delicacy in treatment, a delicacy which, we are afraid, Miss Seymour does not possess. It is obviously an effort for her to be simple and natural, and even with all her effort she does not succeed in the end she has in view. 'The Ballad of Fifi,' like other verses in the book, contains expressions and allusions which would altogether mystify even the cleverest of children.

From Messrs. S. W. Partridge & Co.—'Letters on the Simple Life.' In this paper-bound volume, the contents of which have previously appeared in the Daily Graphic, the Bishop of London contributes his views on 'The Duties of Life,' Marie Corelli writes of 'Social Honesty,' Mrs. Craigie (John Oliver Hobbes) has something to say about 'The Morbid Craving for Excitement,' Coulson Kernahan relates 'An Author's Personal Experience,' Canon Barnett enlarges on 'The Growth of Luxury,' Lady Archibald Campbell discusses 'The Remedial Influence of Art,' and Sarah Grand, Sir Lewis Morris, W. Pett Ridge, Sir A. Conan Doyle, Dr. Clifford, Sir James Crichton Browne, and numerous other distinguished men and authors, express their opinions on the phase of life with which their experiences have best made them acquainted. The book is interesting, no inconsiderable portion of its attraction arising from the diversity of judgment shown. Occasionally, no doubt, the reader acquainted with the writings of the various authors will be moved to a state of mild astonishment at the opinions enunciated.

From Messrs. George Philip & Son, Ltd.—'The Calvert Scientific Exploring Expedition,' by J. G. Hill. This expedition in 1896, in the interior of Australia was of considerable importance and value, and this short record of it is very interesting. Unfortunately the expedition was attended with loss of life, and the search for the two men, C. F. Wells and G. L. Jones, who had parted from the main body, and who died of exhaustion and want of water in that inhospitable region, is very graphically told. The account is altogether a very brief one, but it is well worth reading, and will give the reader an excellent idea of what the Australian Bush is like, and what travelling in it really means.

From the Religious Tract Society.—'John Wesley, Evangelist,' by the Rev. Richard Green. The career of this celebrated divine and earnest evangelist has many times been described, but it still remains a favoured theme for the biographer. This is in a great measure due to the intense interest evoked by his unceasing endeavours to promote the spiritual welfare of the people among whom he lived and moved throughout his long and eventful life. The Methodist revival brought about by John Wesley, in conjunction with his brother Charles, the gifted hymn-writer, is still a potent force even in these 'decadent days,' and bears evidence of the enduring work achieved by them. The author of this book emphasises the fact that the Wesley ancestry were favoured as 'combining, learning, respectability, and godliness on both sides,' adding, further, their descendant John was possessed of a 'collocation of distinguishing characteristics that formed the special qualifications for his remarkable career.' All this is told by Mr. Green in his most interesting biography, the value of which is further enhanced by the many fine portraits accompanying the text.

From the same.—'James Legge, Missionary and Scholar,' by Helen Edith Legge. Dr. Legge was for thirty-three years a missionary in Malacca and Hong Kong; in 1877 he took up work as Professor of Chinese in the University of Oxford, which work he continued until his death in 1897. He was a scholar of great literary gifts, a man of varied experience, and a zealous Christian. His work as a missionary is here dealt with in a graphic and readable manner, and an adequate account is given of his Chinese studies. The book is well planned out and brightly written, and there are a fair number of excellent illustrations.

From the same.—'Old Testament Criticism in New Testament Light,' by Dr. G. H. Rouse, M.A. If midway in life the advisability of changing our career, of starting on a new path to gain our livelihood, were presented to us, there is hardly a man who would not embark upon such a course in fear and doubt, the failure or success of the enterprise must touch him so nearly. Well, whether he hold fast to the Faith or not, no one will deny that the truth or the falsehood of it affects him nearly; and yet much so-called criticism of the Bible is entered upon in a light-hearted, dilettante spirit, as though the issue were of no more import than the enjoyment of some stimulating recreation which especially appeals to us. We would not infer that what is called the higher criticism is altogether of this kind, but we do say that under this term much trivial criticism is included. The criticism whose sole aim is to get at the truth is always to be welcomed, for truth must thereby be the gainer and not the sufferer. Doctor Rouse's book deals comprehensively with the question of this Higher Criticism as regards the Old Testament and Christ's utterances respecting it as recorded in the New, and we have no hesitation in saying that he makes out a very strong case against such criticism. Of course, it is impossible to enter here into the points discussed, but practically the whole field is covered by these logical and lucid arguments. In all criticism upon the Bible it would seem that everyone has a right to be heard, except Christ; His testimony is ignored as carrying no weight, and since in the ordinary affairs of life such criticism would not be considered justifiable, we may gauge what value is to be set upon it when it is used regarding the the truths of religion. We can only hope that this volume will find a wide circle of readers, and that it will be carefully studied.

From the same.—'The Epistle to the Philippians,' by Rev. T. B. Meyer, B.A. This devotional commentary is, we think, a useful exposition of St. Paul's epistle, and is in no way a critical digest of it. We suppose that no two thinking men who read an epistle of St. Paul's will draw from it identical lessons, and, indeed, will often understand it in ways that seem opposed, while as a fact they have both obtained something of the truth. This being so, and no one is likely to dispute the fact, a work of this sort is always difficult to deal with. The word 'devotional' labels it, and if we feel that the author's explanations and elucidation of passages add little to the clear meaning of the words written by the Apostle, that is not to say that there may not be many people who will find this commentary exceedingly useful.

From the Fleming H. Revell Co. — 'Mark Burns Manuscript, or the Heart of the World, a Story of Christian Socialism,' by Charles M. Sheldon. This is a new book by the author of the popular work 'In His Steps' wherein he again takes the advantage of fiction for advocating his altruistic theories. The Rev. Frederick Stanton, of the Saint Cecilia Metropolitan Church, has written a book named 'The Christian Socialist' using the nom-de-plume of Mark Burns in order not to disclose his identity. The book achieves a great success and is warmly discussed by the various citizens and religious bodies in his native town of South Lenox, U.S. Being chosen Bishop of the diocese, Stanton, at the induction ceremony, avows himself the writer of the 'dangerous and pernicious volume' and forthwith resigns his office. In so doing he gains the adhesion to his principles of Mildred Rodney, daughter of one of his prominent parishioners, who subsequently becomes his wife, and henceforth is a loving helpmate. The earnest and strenuous efforts displayed by Stanton in his endeavours to soften the asperities between master and workman at the Lenox Mill, and the sympathy shown by him under adverse circumstances, are well depicted. The book fully sustains the reputation already gained by the author in England, for it is intensely interesting.

From Messrs. Geo. Routledge & Sons, Ltd.—'In Praise of Books.' Every book-lover ought to have this charming little 'Encheiridion,' the latest addition to the daintiest 'Miniature Reference Library' in the world. It is choicely printed, on pleasing good white paper, bound in imitation padded morocco. The collecting has been well done by H. Swan,—there must be more than 400 extracts from Praises of books arranged under authors in alphabetical order. Opening it at random, we come across this from William Cobbett's 'Advice to Young Men': 'Books never annoy.' Was ever a greater untruth penned? Cobbett disproves its truth in another place by saying 'Hope that your taste will keep you aloof from the writings of those detestable villains, who employ the powers of their mind in debauching the minds of others . . . These men ought to be held in universal abhorrence, and never spoken of but with execration.' What pity we have no William Cobbetts at the present day.

From the same.—'Only My Fun,' by Walter Emanuel. Although the evolution of some of Mr. Emanuel's witty bits is too obvious, on the whole this little book is the best collection of fun—not always funny—which we have seen for a long time. When we say not always funny we mean that some of the jokes are pretty grim—like that of the South African War Boer who had shot one of our men and pinned to his breast, on January 1, 1900, these words: 'Wishing you a Happy New Sentry.' We are glad to find Mr. Emanuel is not an admirer of the Gibson Girl. He says: 'that artist's massive ladies with the inperious mien always left me quite untouched. To me their superb physique simply suggested husband-beating.' Not that Mr. Emanuel is a small man. He can look over most men's heads without stretching much. Our idea of the Gibson Girl is not that she would beat her husband, but that she would bore him to death, which is much worse. In these days, when evening papers call the wit displayed by judge and counsel in such a case as that of Thomas v. Toby M.P., for instance, 'Excruciatingly funny,' it is something to come across a book like 'Only My Fun,' which will sow the seeds of laughter in many a jaded mind. We can conscientiously recommend a dose of 'Only My Fun' to be taken after dinner with a pipe or cigar. The author of 'Only My Fun' may care nohing about it, but a good many of his readers who will appreciate his smart sayings will regret that a dash of vulgarity and coarseness makes its disagreeable presence felt here and there. As the Spectator said in noticing another book which aims at being humorous, 'The real humourist would always hold a few things sacred'.

From Messrs. Swan Sonnenschein & Co.—'The Temptation of Philip Carr,' by May Wynne. Hugh Graham takes a boy from the gutter, and trains him up to be a missioner among the people of the East End, from whom he has come. Philip's love for Mollie Forsyth tempts him to abandon this work, and, although he resists it, he can hardly be said to have treated her fairly. There is a laudable purpose in the book, but the society the author describes must not be taken as representative. The 'smart set' comprises only a small section after all, and is, perhaps, not so bad as it is painted; while among the titled and the wealthy in the land there really are some quite good people, and there are not many mothers, however worldly, who teach their children to mix funny comments with their evening prayers in order that the guests may be taken into the nursery to laugh at them. We mention this in case some of the readers of this novel should not happen to know any titled or wealthy people, and be misled by the author, who has evidently been rather unfortunate in her acquaintances among society people.

From the Student Volunteer Missionary Union.—'Outline Studies on Japan' and 'Outline Studies on Mohammedanism,' by Tissington Tatlow; 'Studies in Buddhism and Christianity,' by A. H. Small. These outlines should prove extremely useful to the student, and form a very valuable scaffolding about which he may build up his knowledge. The last mentioned book contains an exceedingly interesting introductory chapter on Buddhism, showing the difficulties which attend the practical student of this vast religion. Comparatively there is little in common between the thoughts and ideas of East and West, and it is very difficult to express a meaning to one in the terms of the other. As the author says, 'Buddhism is only in process of discovery by Western scholars.'

NEW EDITIONS.—We welcome a new and revised edition of that excellent work 'How to Become a Nurse,' edited by Sir Henry Burdett, K.C.B. It is published by the Scientific Press, Ltd.—'The Cleevers of Cleever,' by Annie Thomas, and 'Indiscretions,' by Cosmo Hamilton, have been added to Messrs. Anthony Treherne & Co.'s shilling novel series.

NEW EDITIONS.—An excellent little book is 'A Mountain Path,' by John A. Hamilton, a cheap edition of which has just been issued by Mr. H.R. Allenson. It consists of forty-four talks to young people.—Messrs. Wells Gardner, Darton & Co. send us a copy of the fifth edition (carefully revised) of 'The Truth of Christianity,' compiled from various sources by Lt.-Col. W. H. Turton, D.S.O.

A new edition of the 'Life, Religious Opinions, and Experience of Madame Guyon,' by Thomas C. Upham, with Introduction by W. R. Inge, M.A., has been sent us by Mr. H. R. Allenson. This biography of an earnest Christian gentlewoman of France, in the reign of Louis XIV., has achieved a well merited immortality, containing, as it does, much that is of personal interest regarding the heroism of faith.

We have been favoured by the Cambridge University Press with a copy of their Revised Version of the Gospel by St. John edited, with an Introduction and Notes, by the Rev. Arthur Carr, M.A. This edition is well adapted as a guide for young scholars, for whom it is presented in a clear and intelligible form.

A copy of the third volume of the Selected Works of Mdlle. Riego de la Branchardière, devoted to 'Crochet, Knitting, Lacework, &c.,' and published by Mr. Horace Cox, now lies before us. The work, which is edited and revised by Mrs. Rivers Turnbull, is well and profusely illustrated.

We have received from Messrs. Hodder & Stoughton a copy of their new (thirteenth) edition of the Rev. R. W. Dale's popular volume of sermons, named 'The Living Christ and the Four Gospels.'

Messrs. Macmillan & Co. have favoured us with a copy of their charming pocket edition of J. H. Shorthouse's romance 'John Inglesant,' and in this form the book is deserving of even greater popularity.

We have received from Messrs. Nilsson & Co. a copy of their 'Pleasure Guide to Paris, translated from the new French edition by George Day, F.R.M.S., in which the author desires to act as an expert cicerone in enabling the English traveller 'to see Paris in all its detail.' The book contains a plan of Paris showing the position of the principal pleasure resorts.

Messrs. S. W. Partridge & Co. have sent us the second and cheaper edition of J. Davies-Smith's interesting book, 'Palestine Portrayed,' illustrated as heretofore from photos taken en route.

PUBLICATIONS OF THE WEEK.

WITH AN INDEX OF AUTHORS, TITLES, AND SUBJECTS OF BOOKS IN ONE ALPHABET.

All books are in cloth when not otherwise described. When the word 'net' is printed against the price of a book it means that there is not the usual trade allowance. The words of the Index which are printed in italics refer to the name under which the title of a work appears in larger type. Publishers who observe the omission of a book from the list will confer a favour by sending a copy of the title to the office for insertion in the next number.

REGULATIONS.

1. BOOKS IN PRINT ARE NOT ADVERTISED FOR, but can only appear in the ordinary Column advertisements and at the usual scale rate. Every care is taken to prevent this rule from being infringed; but we cannot hold ourselves in any way responsible for occasional oversights. Subscribers are requested to make careful inquiry at the Publishers' before sending their lists for these Columns.
2. Collective advertisements are not admissible, except in the case of very old subjects, where it may naturally be supposed the Advertisers have a difficulty in obtaining the titles.
3. All lists should be sent to the Office, addressed to the 'Manager of the Publishers' Circular,' as early in the week as possible, and in no case later than Wednesday morning. Advertisements received too late for one issue (i.e., on Thursday) are not inserted in the next unless express instructions to this effect are given. This is to avoid any misunderstanding arising from charging for extra lines.
4. Every Annual Subscriber has the privilege of an Advertisement of four titles free each week in these columns, and can have extra titles at 3d. per title prepaid. For Non-Subscribers a uniform rate of 3d. per title prepaid is charged, the name and address being counted as one title.
5. The Proprietors reserve to themselves the right of refusing any Advertisement.

THE MASTER MUMMER. 6s.

By E. P. OPPENHEIM.

Illustrated Mail.—'A delightful and fascinating story.'
Birmingham Post.—'Well and forcibly written.'
Western Morning News.—'Like Sam Weller's valentine, it makes the reader "wish there was more."'
Liverpool Courier.—'As engrossing a work of fiction as this gifted author has ever penned.'
Daily Express.—'Is equal to the author's best.'
Leeds Mercury.—'The interest increases at every chapter.'

THE JACKAL. 6s.

By COULSON KERNAHAN.

Sunday Times.—'Not even in those allegorical prose poems of his which have won him his greatest popularity has Mr. Kernahan written with such studied care and yet such vivid descriptive power as in his exciting yarn of "The Jackal," and ingenious as was the plot of "Scoundrels and Co.," that of his new book is a yet happier stroke of invention, and its interest is much better sustained."

MILLIONS OF MISCHIEF. 6s.

By HEADON HILL.

Morning Leader.—'Mr. Hill has seldom put greater finish into his work, and the result is a striking and vigorous book.'

A PRINCE OF LOVERS. 6s.

By Sir WILLIAM MAGNAY, Bart.

Lloyd's News.—'Sir Wm. Magnay's latest story, "A Prince of Lovers," should bring him added repute. . . . Adventure enough to satisfy the most ardent lover of exciting romance.'

Portsmouth Times.—'A brilliant romance, crowded with stirring incident, and is never for a moment dull.'

THE WEIRD PICTURE. 6s.

By JOHN R. CARLING, Author of 'The Shadow of the Czar' &c.

Dundee Courier.—'Mr. Carling displays much erudition and good literary style in his story, and at all times he is most entertaining. His knowledge of men and things imparts much additional interest to the story and places it far above the average standard of fiction.'

Birmingham Post.—'As exciting and thrilling as the most ardent lover of sensationalism could desire.'

THE YELLOW WAVE. 6s.

By M. P. SHIEL.

Daily Mail.—'Mr. Sheil is desparately audacious, and is remarkably facile of invention.'
Daily Express.—'"The Yellow Wave" is certainly more interesting than nine out of ten modern novels.'

VIGOROUS DAUNT: Billionaire. 6s.

By AMBROSE PRATT.

Scotsman.—'The novel is at once fresh, witty, ingenious, and full of entertainment. In his portrayal of character and the creation of incidents and situations Mr. Pratt's audacity simply defies criticism; he has given free rein, with literary taste, to a vivacious imagination.'

THE QUEEN OF QUELPARTE. 6s.

By ARCHER BUTLER HULBERT.

Against a strange background of Korean customs is thrown a striking picture, a novel romance of Russian diplomatic intrigue mixed with native superstition.

WHITEWASH. 6s.

Illustrated by F. H. TOWNSEND.

ROGER TREWINION. 3s. 6d.

By JOSEPH HOCKING.

To-day.—'One of Mr. Hocking's most absorbing stories.'
Morning Leader.—'The tale is a good sound one, wholesome in tone and rapid in movement.'
Manchester Courier.—'Mr. Hocking is at his best in West Country stories, and "Roger Trewinion" contains some of his most attractive work.'

THE PIERROTS ON THE PIER. 3s. 6d.

By PAUL HERRING.

Glasgow Herald.—'Mr. Herring's book is highly ingenious and decidedly original.'
North Devon Journal.—'Is likely to be one of the most popular books for the holiday season.'

LE DOMAINE PUBLIC.

'When I was young—ah, woeful when.' The changes in the various branches of the trade—'the difference 'twixt now and then'—are very marked, and yet it is not easy to trace the progress of these changes, they have been so gradual. If I take a random backward glance, say, for fifty or sixty years I might find some food for reflection as regards works then in progress or only projected which have since created and realised, or failed to realise, great expectations; which have run their course, have fallen in and fallen out of copyright. Many of them, of course, have passed into absolute oblivion, as though they had never been. Others, having made great reputations for their authors, had begun to bring home to them substantial results, when they fell into the public domain, And so all the great authors of the days when I was young, of the early and middle parts of the nineteenth century, have already become the prey—or perhaps I may call it the perquisites—of enterprising publishers of these early years of the twentieth century. I presume it will be said, as it always has been said, that it is a good and righteous thing that the great public should participate in the great thoughts of great men without let or hindrance, and that there should be no monopoly to block the way; but then authors are but men, they cannot work for the good of the public and starve. They must have some protection so as to secure to themselves the fruit of their labours—and for this purpose the law of copyright was instituted. The law which prevailed sixty years ago—known as Talfourd's Act of 1842—is the law which for the most part prevails now. It seems to have been with the utmost difficulty that Talfourd carried his Act, after many compromises, giving the author copyright for his life and seven years after, or forty-two years—whichever term proved the longest.

And now, where are the copyrights of works not yet written 'when I was young'? How many hundreds of the families and descendants of such authors might now be very properly deriving an income from their works if Talfourd's original wish had been carried out—viz., a copyright term of seventy years? It is quite easy to say that the present generation of the great public is enjoying the benefit of being able to buy the works of these old great authors at perhaps one twentieth of the price we had to pay for them when we and they were young. The original publishers have generally possessed the greatest facilities for bringing out cheap and reliable editions, and they have always been ready and willing to do so, and many of them have continued to pay royalties to the authors long after the copyrights have expired. But where is the publisher of to-day who can resist the temptation of having for his very own a series of every writer who had made a great reputation, say, prior to the year 1863? Is it not fair business enterprise? And the charm of it is that there is no troublesome author to pay! It must surely, however, sometimes happen to enterprising publishers that their—

> Vaulting ambition doth o'erleap itself
> And fall on the other side.

One pretty series in the catalogue of one publisher, if he could but say 'hands off' to other publishers, would doubtless prove a fortune for him; but when there are half-a-dozen publishers all bent on bringing out the prettiest and choicest series of the same works, one or other of them must go to the wall. Shakespeare has been a mine of wealth to publishers from the days of Jacob Tonson, who was 'the first bookseller who threw him open to a reading public,' down to the numberless editions of the twentieth century. John Bunyan, Izaac Walton, Gilbert White, have helped to enrich many a publisher in the bygone centuries, and they still maintain their ground. Sir Walter Scott and his successors enjoyed full copyright in my young days. Dickens, Thackeray, Lord Lytton, and many another were in the full swing of popularity then. Macaulay may be said to have been 'hoist with his own petard.' He it was who most strenuously opposed the extension of copyright beyond the term of our existing Act, but for which our great hungry public might still have been starving for Dickens and Thackeray and Macaulay—and would only just have been recovering from a first free feast of Scott.

The new Copyright Bill now before Parliament, and which has been so more or less for the past thirty years, will give, if it ever becomes the law of the land, some additional grace to most authors. The time must be approaching when the old giants whose names I have mentioned, and many others which I have not mentioned, will no longer prove to be good copy for our printers, and publishers will be looking for 'fresh fields and pastures new'—and where will they find them? Who will be the new giants for Jack to kill? E. M.

NOTES AND ANNOUNCEMENTS.

The two new volumes of Messrs. J. M. Dent & Co.'s illustrated edition of the novels of the Sisters Brontë will be 'Wuthering Heights' and 'The Professor.' These volumes have six coloured illustrations each, by Edmund Dulac.

The 'Temple Classics' is about to have an interesting volume added to the already large number of interesting and rare books contained within its limits. 'The Labyrinth of the World,' by Komensky—or Comenius, as he is generally called in England—is the favourite book of the Bohemian people. This Bohemian classic has been translated by Count Lutzow, and in an instructive introduction the inevitable analogy between the 'Labyrinth' and Bunyan's almost contemporary 'Pilgrim's Progress' is discussed at some length.

Mr. Eveleigh Nash will issue immediately a shilling edition, in paper covers, of Mr. Carl Joubert's well-known work, 'Russia as it really is.'

The works of Lucian of Samosata, translated into English by H. W. Fowler and F. G. Fowler, in four volumes, are about to be added to the Clarendon Press series of translations. It may be recalled that Macaulay described Lucian as the last great master of Attic eloquence and Attic wit. The translators have inscribed on the title-page Lucian's own remark: 'At each flaw, be this your first thought: the author doubtless said something quite different, and much more to the point. And then you may hiss me off, if you will.'

'True Stories of Famous Songs' is the title of a new series which will commence in next week's issue of the Musical Home Journal. A number of notable songs, with a short account of their history, will be included in this series, the first dealt with being 'Swanee River,' arranged by Jules Riviere.

Messrs. Methuen are publishing a new novel by Mr. Bernard Capes, entitled 'A Jay of Italy.' It is a romantic story of Italy in the period just before the Renaissance.

The same publishers will issue next week Mrs. Mann's new novel, 'The Parish Nurse.' Like most of this author's books, it is of a quiet and domestic nature, telling the story of an English lady, who, to escape from unsatisfied love, accepts the post of a parish nurse in a country district, and finds happiness at the last.

Mr. H. W. Tompkins' volume on Selborne, which he has been preparing for Messrs. Dents' series of 'Temple Topographies,' will be ready in a few days. The illustrations are by Mr. Henry J. Howard, and many quaint and interesting bits of the village immortalised by Gilbert White find pictorial expression in the book's pages.

We are authorised to state that the literary executors of the late Cardinal Newman have entrusted to Mr. Wilfrid Ward the task of writing the Cardinal's biography.

A new work by Captain A. T. Mahan in two volumes will be published in October by Messrs. Sampson Low, Marston & Co., Ltd., entitled 'Sea Power in its Relations to the War of 1812.' The volumes will contain photogravure illustrations, maps and plans, and the price will probably be 36*s.* net.

The same firm are re-issuing an official book on 'Norway,' which contains authentic information about all the political affairs which have led to the present crisis in that country, including history, international position, political constitution, and administration, judicial organisation, social conditions, &c. &c.

Three of the books in general literature recently published by Messrs. Methuen have had considerable success. Mr. Vardon's 'Complete Golfer' is now in its third edition. Miss Beetham Edwards's 'Home Life in France' is in its second edition, and Mr. Baring's 'With the Russians in Manchuria' is reprinting for a second edition.

Mr. Lionel Portman's long anticipated story of public school life, entitled 'Hugh Rendal,' will be published on Tuesday next (July 25) by Mr. Alston Rivers. Mr. Portman is perhaps best known as an Old Blue, though as the author of 'Station Studies' he has already some claim to literary fame. Since the book deals with the contemporary public school as it really is, it should prove particularly welcome at a time when attention is focussed on the subject.

A History of Studham, lying partly in Bedfordshire and partly in Hertfordshire, is about to be published by the Rev. J. E. Brown, under the title 'Studham: the Story of a Secluded Parish,' through Mr. Elliot Stock. The work gives an account of the parish from the time of the Norman Conquest, and has many curious and interesting illustrations interspersed through its pages.

Messrs. L. N. Fowler & Co. inform us that they have in the press a little book that will undoubtedly command considerable interest among people who have paid any attention to the alarming growth of cases of mental derangement during recent years. The little work in question is called 'Brain Building,' and is written by Mr. Joseph Ralph, a gentleman who has for some years devoted special attention to this very interesting subject, and who has demonstrated the principles indicated through practical application.

Messrs. Methuen have commenced the issue of a new and very interesting series. These books are popular and topographical, and are all illustrated in colour by distinguished artists. The following books are either ready or nearly ready: 'The Norfolk Broads,' by W. A. Dutt, illustrated by Frank Southgate; 'Naples,' by A. H. Norway, illustrated by Maurice Greiffenhagen; 'A Wanderer in Holland,' by E. V. Lucas, illustrated by Herbert Marshall; and 'The Cities of Umbria,' by Edward Hutton, illustrated by Alberto Pisa. The price of these books is 6*s.* each.

Messrs. Methuen have also issued in their 'Ancient Cities' series a new volume on Shrewsbury by Mr. Thomas Auden, illustrated in black and white by Miss K. M. Roberts.

The publishing business of the Cambridge University Press will be removed on August 1 from Ave Maria Lane to Nos. 133–137 Fetter Lane (St. Dunstan's House), the premises recently acquired by the University.

Mr. Edward Noble—whose first novel, 'The Edge of Circumstance,' was one of the successes of last year—is bringing out another story of the sea under the title of 'The Lady Navigators.' The Press has already spoken of Mr. Noble's work as challenging comparison with that of Mr. Kipling and Mr. Joseph Conrad. 'The Lady Navigators' has all the intimate knowledge of sea life displayed by its predecessor, together with a touch of the farcical humour of Mr. W. W. Jacobs. It will be published early in the autumn by Messrs. S. C. Brown, Langham & Co., Ltd.

Messrs. William Dawson & Sons, Bream's Buildings, E.C., have just issued the seventeenth edition of their most useful little Red-book, size 18mo., which contains a complete List of English and Foreign Newspapers, Magazines, &c., for Home and Abroad, with the amount of annual subscriptions. They will send it by post to anyone on receipt of one penny.

Messrs. Maclaren & Co. announce that they will publish this month 'Heartache,' by Maxim Gorky, which has been translated into English for the first time by Dr. Rappoport. This book will be issued in sixpenny form.

Our friends in the Colonies should note that Mr. A. Lang's Christmas book will be 'The Red Romance Book,' with eight coloured plates and other illustrations by H. J. Ford; and the new 'Golliwogg' book will be 'The Golliwogg's Fox Hunt,' with coloured plates by Florence Bertha Upton.

ANNUAL OUTING OF MR. T. FISHER UNWIN'S STAFF.

The staff of Mr. T. Fisher Unwin spent a delightful day in the country on Saturday last — train from Waterloo to Midhurst. Brakes met company at Midhurst, and, after a delightful drive through lovely Sussex scenery, the Spread Eagle Hotel—quaint, old-fashioned hostelry, built in 1650—was reached. Here luncheon was served, and a very ample and elegant repast it was indeed. The party subsequently adjourned to the pretty grounds of Mr. Unwin's private residence, where they witnessed a quaint and beautiful Maypole procession and dance, and where also a pastural play, entitled 'The Masque of May Morning' (written by Graham Robertson), was performed in a most skilful and charming manner. The spectators were enthusiastic in their praise of this delightful entertainment, and in their expressions of gratitude to Mr. T. Fisher Unwin for his generous kindness and gracious hospitality. The outing will not soon be forgotten by those who took part in it.

UNITED STATES DEFINITION OF 'SUPPLEMENTS' TO NEWSPAPERS, &c.

POST OFFICE, NEW YORK: May 25, 1905.

To Publishers.—In connection with the circular of this office of April 15, 1905, in which publishers were notified that on and after September 1, 1905, second-class publications 'with which are enclosed any alleged supplements not permissible under the law and the rulings of the Post Office Department to be mailed with second-class matter will not be accepted for mailing at the second-class rates of postage,' your attention is directed to the extract from an order of the Third Assistant Postmaster-General, dated May 18, 1905, on this subject, printed below.

Publishers now using or contemplating the using of supplements are advised to carefully consider their admissibility under the law and to ascertain whether such enclosures will affect the mailability of their publications as second-class matter, as it is obvious that many enclosures now mailed with publications as supplements will not be permissible under the law as it is to be administered after September 1 next.

OFFICE OF THIRD ASSIST. P. M. GENERAL,
WASHINGTON, D.C., May 18, 1905.

To all Postmasters—

A general interpretation which will cover every case that may arise cannot be given in advance, but for the benefit of postmasters and such publishers as are concerned, the meaning and effect of the law may be stated in general terms. It is, however, manifest that there may be many individual cases which will not clearly fall within any general statement. Each case must, therefore, be decided on its own merits as shown by the particular facts in evidence.

It is, of course, understood that under the law the inclosure of matter of a higher class with matter of a lower class subjects the whole to the higher rate, and this law applies when an alleged supplement is not a supplement, but really matter of another class.

The following is the statute in relation to supplements:

'Publishers of matter of the second class may, without subjecting it to extra postage, fold within their regular issues a supplement; but in all cases the added matter must be germane to the publication which it supplements—that is to say, matter supplied in order to complete that to which it is added or supplemented, but omitted from the regular issue for want of space, time, or greater convenience—which supplement must in every case be issued with the publication.' (Sec. 457, P. L. & R.)

In all cases where application is made for information postmasters may state that the above law, which will be administered after September 1 next, according to its plain intent, provides that a supplement, to be mailable with a newspaper or periodical at the second-class rates, must, as the word indicates, be in truth a 'supplement'; as such, it must be 'germane' to the publication; and it must be 'matter supplied in order to complete' that to which it is alleged to be a supplement. It must appear in point of fact that the publication itself is incomplete without its supplement; it must also appear in point of fact that the function of the supplement is subsidiary and not independent or complete in itself; in other words, that it requires both to make a complete copy of that issue. By way of illustration: A newspaper having an article in relation to the Philippine Islands might properly have as a supplement a map of those islands; or, having an article relating to a person or place, might have as a supplement a picture of that person or place; but a map of the Philippines, or a picture of a person or eplace, enclosed as a gift to the subscriber and not performing the real function of a supplement, is an extraneous thing and not mailable at second-class rates.

It is not sufficient for an alleged supplement to be given a notice in the main publication as a sort of hook upon which to hang something which is not a supplement in fact and which really has an independent purpose and function. That is to say, a merely colourable reference will not suffice; the connection must be real, not fictitious. In every case it must appear from the publication and the supplement taken together that they form one integral whole.

If a publisher desires to give or sell to the purchasers of his publication some extraneous thing, like a calendar, cut-out picture, lithograph, pamphlet, &c., he is not prevented from doing so; but upon such things when sent in the mails he must, like every other citizen, pay the legal rate of postage. He may not make his publication, itself transmissible at the second-class rates, the vehicle for the distribution of things properly chargeable at a higher rate, to the detriment of the Government revenues. The postal laws must be properly administered, and it is expected that good faith will be observed by publishers.

Where there is doubt in any case as to the legality of an enclosure purporting to be a supplement, postmasters are authorised to accept the publication—enclosure and all—under a deposit in money at the third- or fourth-class rate (as may be the lawful rate on the enclosure itself if it were mailed alone), and submit the question to the Department. Should the decision be favourable to the publisher the excess over the second-class rates will be refunded; should it be unfavourable the money on deposit will be covered into the postal revenue by the usual method of converting the amount into postage stamps, cancelling, and sending them to the Department.

Postmasters must not regard these instructions as to supplements as affecting the constituent 'sections' or 'parts' of a publication issued in sections or parts. If there be any abuse in this latter regard it will be treated separately.

EDWIN C. MADDEN,
Third Assistant Postmaster-General.
Bull. 7687.

ON THE PROPOSAL TO ERECT A STATUE TO SHAKESPEARE IN LONDON.

BY ALFRED AUSTIN.

WHY should we lodge in marble or in bronze
Spirits more vast than earth, or sea, or sky?
Wiser the silent worshipper who cons
Their page for Wisdom that will never die.
Unto the favourites of the passing hour
Erect the statue and unveil the bust,
Whereon contemptuous Time will slowly shower
Oblivion's refuse and neglectful dust,
The Monarchs of the Mind, self-sceptered Kings,
Need no memento to transmit their name:
Throned on their thoughts and high imaginings,
They are the Lords, not servitors, of Fame.
Raise pedestals to perishable stuff;
Gods for themselves are monument enough.

From the National Review.

THE UNIVERSITY OF CHICAGO PRESS.

THE University of Chicago Press announces the addition to its list of publications of two new journals devoted to the interests of the ancient classics, viz. Classical Philology, published for the University of Chicago, and The Classical Journal, published for the newly-formed Classical Association of the Middle-West and South. The former will contain scientific articles and critical reviews; the latter will contain articles, reviews, and editorials of a more general nature with special reference to the needs of teachers of the classics in school and college. The two journals will aim to supplement one another, appealing largely to the same classes of readers but emphasizing different points of view.

Both journals will devote a large portion of their space to signed book reviews. At the present time there is no journal in America, and but one in the English-speaking world, which makes a specialty of reviewing books in the field of the classics. It is therefore believed that a unique opportunity is open to these journals, and that they will prove of great service in drawing the attention of teachers and scholars to the current literature of the classics.

Classical Philology will be a quarterly, and the first number will appear in December. The Classical Journal will appear eight times a year, the first number in November.

THE PROBLEM OF CRITICISM.*

THERE is a story of a carpenter's apprentice who ran through the streets with his arms extended, crying out, 'Don't get in my way! Don't get in my way! I am carrying the measure of a door.' The critic who is honest in his trade will hardly claim that his methods are much more exact than this. There is no metric system that can take the precise height and breadth and depth of works of genius. And literature and music, at least, dwell in regions of the fourth dimension and are floated still farther out of reach of measurement and comparison.

What is literature? Why do we read books? The answers to the first question are as various as the minds that have essayed the riddle. To Aristotle, literature was an imitation of life. To Plato, it was an imitation of an imitation, a copy of that which itself is only a blurred reflection of the Divine Ideas. To Schiller, literature was the play impulse of mankind, man's spirit freeing itself in the ideal. To Ruskin, literature was man's hymn of praise to God. To Matthew Arnold, it was a criticism of life. The trouble with all such explanations is that they do not explain. They are partial and inadequate. They do not cover the whole ground. We have to frame a definition of literature which will bridge the gulf between the Iliad and 'The Banquet of Trimalchio,' between 'King Lear' and 'Willie brew'd a peck o' maut'; between the philosophy of Kant and the latest detective story. And we have to take into account that the mortal puts on immortality when transformed by art. Literature may be a shadow, an imitation, a criticism of life. It may be a reflection in a mirror, but its images detach themselves from the glass; they walk out into the world with an existence no less assured and certainly more lasting than the creatures of life, and they dominate the world for good or evil.

Perhaps in the answer to our second question we may find some solution of the first. Here, too, there are many guesses, but critical opinion may be said to arrange itself into two opposing camps. One clan of critics claim that the purpose of literature is pleasure. It awakens, they say, agreeable images and impulses in our minds, and its essence therefore is beauty. To the other army the end of literature is moral good. It tends, they say, to instruct, discipline, and exalt mankind.

The first of these explanations is plainly inadmissible in regard to many of the mightiest works of literature. These tire or shock or appal the average mind. The average mind makes, indeed, no effort to grapple with them, and if they are written to please they miss their object as far as the generality of readers is concerned. Only the most athletic students can cope with them. Undoubtedly when they are finally mastered by these, they give a glow of conquest and achievement, a sense of revelation. But this recompense deserves a higher name than pleasure. When the athlete, after months of laborious training, runs his race and falls fainting at the goal, his sense of triumph is something different from pleasure. When the Catholic penitent flagellates his bare back with a knotted whip, his sense of sin rebuked, of flesh mortified, is something other than pleasure. When the Indian sings his death song at the stake while the fire is licking at his limbs, his stern sense of joy is hardly pleasure in any ordinary meaning of the term. While we have such ideas as duty, honour, devotion, religious emotion to explain the incitements of men to difficult or heroic deeds, there is certainly no need to subsume all these under the inferior conception of pleasure. And all these feelings and many others held us on in our dealings with literature. The case is similar in regard to beauty, which many writers on æsthetic deem the central or sole object of literature. We have the ideas of the grand, the sublime, the pathetic, the terrible, the grotesque, the imperfect, all of which enter into the productions of art. Why should we arrange all these conceptions, some of which transcend and some of which contradict the idea of beauty, under that term? Beauty, indeed, is only one of the elements out of which the world of art is fashioned.

The parties of the other part, who contend for literature as an instrument of use and moral improvement, have a far better case, but even they do not have the whole law in their hands. Much admirable literature is repugnant to the moral sense. If we deal with books in any large way we must read those which contaminate the mind, which hurt the soul. We cannot ignore them and pass them by, under penalty of dwelling in a Fool's Paradise. We must go down and fight with beasts at Ephesus. Zola has his rights as well as St. Thomas à Kempis. Literature is really the tree of the knowledge of good and evil, and the taste of it is apt to be destructive to any Paradise of innocence. It is true that our loss leaves us with a greater strength, but it is a strength of sadness rather than of joy.

If we look at literature in a plain, direct way, we will find, I think, that it has four functions, four ways of serving mankind. It has the power to amuse, it has the power to instruct, it has the power to charm, and it has the power to exalt. Of course there is no hard and fast line of division between these several gifts. They exist side by side in the same books, and the greatest combine them all.—From an article by Charles Leonard Moore in the Chicago Dial.

IS THE PUBLIC LIBRARY FEMINISED?

It is alleged editorially by the New York Independent that public libraries in the United States 'are useful to the women and children, but not so much to the men.' The writer argues that a reference library rather than a reading library is best suited to masculine minds—'a library primarily composed of books which nobody wants on his own shelves, but which anybody is liable to need some time.'

Women, he says, have become our leisure class, in the technical sense of the term, by the transference of household industries to the factory, and 'it is very gratifying to see how generally they are spending the time thus gained in intellectual effort.' And children use the libraries because they are trained in the public schools to do so. 'But the number of men who take books out of the town library or go to it for reference is very small.' The reasons for this, says The Independent, are two: 'First, the men have come to think that there is nothing in the library for them; and, second, they are usually right in thinking so.' We read further:

'Women use books as playthings; men as tools. When a woman reads a serious book it is usually to improve her mind; a man generally thinks that there are many other things which need improving more than his mind, and he reads to find out how to do it. Bacon, whose tabloid wisdom is popular because it is so convenient to carry in the vest pocket of one's memory, says: "Studies serve for delight, for ornament, and for ability." Of these motives the first and the second are more apt to be dominant with women and the third with men. That is why the studious man looks into more books and reads fewer than the studious woman. For information in itself, apart from any apparent use, man has little liking. He may not be more practical, but he is more objective than a woman.'

The writer thinks that the large predominance of women in library work and management has tended to increase the feminisation of the public libraries. In consequence, 'the town library is to be classed rather with municipal amusements, like the band playing in the park on summer evenings and the fireworks on the Fourth, than with public utilities.' And he offers the following suggestions towards extending its usefulness:

'When the farmer drops in to see what is the red bug that is eating his box-elder trees and what to do for it, or rather against it; when the editor telephones over for a map of Port Arthur for the afternoon edition; when the orator for "Pioneer Day" finds there anecdotes of the early history of the town; when the boy who wants to study electrical engineering in his odd hours does not have to send $25 to a correspondence school for books the library ought to supply; when the village inventor can learn how many times before his non-refillable bottle has been patented; when the grocer's clerk comes over to see what brands of baking powder contain alum; when the mechanic can find out what horse-power he can get from a windmill above his shop; when the political junta adjourns from the drug-store to the library to see how much McKinley ran ahead of his ticket in 1896 in the fifth congressional district; when the young married couple look over the coloured plates of a volume on the house furnishings à l'art nouveau; when the labour leader comes in to look up English laws on the financial responsibility of trades unions; when the mayor sends in for all the books on the municipal ownership of electric-light plants; when the clerk of the district court discovers in the files of the local paper an advertisement of a dissolution of partnership ten years ago—then we can be sure that Andrew Carnegie has not wasted his money.'

MESSRS. NOVELLO & CO.

THE above firm send us a very interesting selection of their recent publications, among which are five exceedingly effective arrangements for the organ. Three of these are original compositions by C. H. Lloyd, and comprise two scherzos, No. 1 in C minor, No. 2 in E major, and a postlude in E flat. These three well-conceived works should appeal to all organists who are in search of something distinctly out of the common. John E. West is represented by an excellent conception in 'Meditation,' and has also edited a number of organ arrangements from the works of Schumann, Mackenzie, Bach, &c. The collection of glees and part songs for male voices, published by Messrs. Novello under the title of 'The Orpheus,' is well known among vocalists, and always looked for with avidity. Members of glee parties will fully appreciate the three latest additions to the series, 'The Christian Martyrs,' a finely dramatic and declamatory part song, 'The Trumpet Sounds,' a highly effective work, and a very melodious setting of 'Jesu, our only Hope of Heaven.' The music is by Laurent de Rillé, and the English words by Paul England. Mr. John E. West is also to the fore in his editing of Bach's 'How Brightly

Shines the Morn,' and 'Christ Lay in Death's Dark Prison,' the English version of which is written by Paul England. The former is a Church cantata and the latter an Easter cantata, both for soli, chorus, and orchestra. Edited also by John E. West are Bach's 'The Spirit also Helpeth Us,' and 'Come, Jesu, Come,' both double choir 'motets,' the English words of which are by William Bartholomew.

CHAPMAN & HALL v. ST. AUGUSTINE'S, KILBURN.

THE match was played at Paddington last Saturday, and resulted in a victory for the former club. Mr. Truslove's innings was a perfect display of accurate and stylish batting, to which the success of his side was mainly due. Mr. Moody's 43 was a spirited and vigorous performance, while Mr. Evans played carefully for his score. On the other side Mr. Fisher played a sound innings of 43. Mr. Dunnett again bowled well for C. & H., taking 5 wickets for 36 runs. The best bowling performance of the match, however, was Mr. Canner's, who took 5 for 29.

After the match both teams were entertained at tea by Mr. and Mrs. Arthur Waugh, and an enjoyable time was spent.

TRADE CHANGE.

THE old-established business of Mr. Thomas Watson, bookseller and stationer, 3 Commercial Street, Leeds, has been purchased by Messrs. W. H. Smith & Son, of 186 Strand, London. The transfer was made on July 1. Mr. Watson has been connected with the trade in Leeds fifty years, nearly half of which were spent in the service of the late Messrs. Harrison & Son as apprentice and assistant. Twenty-five years ago he commenced business on his own account at No. 1 Commercial Street, afterwards removing to larger premises at No. 3, where by industry and integrity he succeeded in establishing a large and prosperous business. His shop was well known in the north of England as a rendezvous for clergymen and ministers. His shelves were always well stocked with the latest theological books. Ladies also largely patronised his establishment, where they could always find what they wanted in the way of literature. Mr. Watson is well known in the city as one who has taken an active part in religious and Sunday school work, having been a lay preacher forty-two years, and in the same Sunday school fifty years. His retirement will afford him greater opportunity for usefulness in these departments of Christian work. Messrs. W. H. Smith & Son intend preserving the high character of the business, and making certain improvements. Mr. H. Ingham, who spent some years with Messrs. Brear, of Bradford, and until recently with Messrs. W. H. Smith & Son, at Leicester, has been appointed manager. The sale was most satisfactorily carried out, on behalf of Mr. Watson and Messrs. W. H. Smith & Son, by Messrs. Holmes & Son, of 33 Paternoster Row, London, E.C.

Notices of Books

From Mr. George Allen.—'The Maintenance of Denominational Teaching: A Note upon Section 7 (1) of the Education Act, 1902,' by Hakluyt Egerton. In this concise, closely reasoned work the author chiefly devotes himself to a consideration of the question: Does the Education Act of 1902 enable or compel a Local Education Authority to 'maintain' religious instruction in a non-provided public elementary school? and the conclusion at which he arrives is that it does not. Therefore, neither 'Rome' nor any other religious denomination is, in Dr. Clifford's sense, 'on the rates.'

From Messrs. Blackie & Son, Ltd.—'Elementary Experimental Science: an Introduction to the Study of Scientific Method,' by W. Mayhowe Heller, B.Sc., and Edwin G. Ingold. There is one opinion expressed in the introductory portion of this volume that to our mind should be engraved in letters of gold. 'Examinations,' say the authors, 'become dangerous when they are worked for, and they should be used by the teacher simply as one method of enabling him to take stock of the results of his teaching. They should be used cautiously and skilfully, as a means to this end, but must not, under any circumstances, be allowed to become an end in themselves.' Preparation for examination, therefore, plays no part in the scheme of the work, though doubtless it may prove useful for this purpose, and its main object is to supply a manual instructing in the elementary facts of science after a purely natural and yet scientific method. The book in the hands of a teacher who possesses some definiteness of purpose should prove of excellent service.

From the same.—'The Song of Hiawatha,' edited, with an Introduction and Notes, by P. T. Creswell, M.A. This is a well-printed edition of Longfellow's work, and in the matter of notes is certainly not overdone. In his Introduction the editor supplies the necessary information concerning the author and the character of his poem.—Among other educational publications we have received from Messrs. Blackie are 'French Exercises, Specially Arranged to Accompany the Skeleton French Grammar,' by H. G. Atkins, M.A.; the 'Breviarium' of Eutropius, edited by W. H. S. Jones, M.A. ('Blackie's Latin Texts'); 'Early Voyages to Japan John Saris and William Adams' ('Blackie's English School Texts'); 'Sintram,' by De la Motte-Fouqué, edited by Medina Pittis ('Blackie's Little German Classics'); and Dumas's Jacomo, ou le Brigand,' edited by Norman Frazer, M.A.; Prosper Mérimée's 'Mateo Falcone' and other short pieces, edited by F. E. Michell, M.A.; and the 'L'Avare' of Molière, edited by G. H. Clarke, M.A., in 'Blackie's Little French Classics. We have also to acknowledge receipt of the 'Upper Thames Counties: Oxford, Berks, and Bucks,' in that admirable series of supplementary Readers known as 'The English Counties.'

From Messrs. W. & R. Chambers, and The Linscote Publishing Co., Toronto and Philadelphia.—'Presidents of the United States in the Century from Jefferson to Fillmore,' by Francis Bellamy; 'Temperance Progress of the Century,' by John G. Woolley, M.A., and William E. Johnson. These are two volumes of the 'Nineteenth Century Series,' under the chief editorship of Justin McCarthy, a series which, as a whole, makes a valuable survey of the century which has just passed. We can hardly yet bring ourselves to speak of it as last century, it makes us feel so very ancient. In the first-named work an attempt is made to trace the history of the United States in the first half of the nineteenth century by a consideration of the successive Presidents, eleven in number, who held political sway during the period from 1801 to 1853; and if we assume that the history of America is chiefly political, the result is entirely satisfactory. At any rate, the volume is full of interest and instruction. The second work under consideration deals with a very wide and important subject, and although the progress of temperance as exemplified in the States is treated of most fully, the rest of the world is not altogether neglected. The opening chapter, 'Alcohol among the Ancients,' is very interesting; and if the somewhat lengthy extracts from journals and speeches render the book monotonous at times, the general record is of considerable importance. As it deals with temperance generally, it is rather a pity that so much space is devoted to the States. For us in England the drink question is a serious one. It concerns us very nearly in these days of Empire and vast responsibility; and with no wish to pose as a prophet of evil, it is certain that Empire without temperance lies on the road towards ruin. We cannot expect to escape the penalty which other Empires have paid before us.

From Messrs. Archibald Constable & Co., Ltd.—'Reason in Common Sense' and 'Reason in Society.' These are the first two volumes in a series treating of 'The Life of Reason, or the Phases of Human Progress,' by George Santayana, Assistant Professor of Philosophy in Harvard University. The object the author has had in view is to describe the Life of Reason; 'that is, to note what facts and purposes seem to be primary, to show how the conception of nature and life gathers around them, and to point to the ideals of thought and action which are approached by this gradual mastering of experience by reason.' Such a weighty subject, it need hardly be said, requires the greatest dexterity in handling, and although we have every respect for the conscientious labour so obviously bestowed by Professor Santayana on his work, we are scarcely so favourably impressed by his clearness of exposition. Many of his sentences are very much involved, ponderous unfamiliar words are used where surely simpler terms might be employed, and the treatises as a whole are confusedly academic in tone and lack lightness of touch. This, however, is an old complaint in philosophic and scientific writings: apparently when treating of a profound topic it is wellnigh impossible to be otherwise than laboured in style and learnedly obscure. In the first of the two volumes under notice Professor Santayana discusses among other topics the birth of reason, first steps and first fluctuations, the discovery of natural objects, various criticisms of this discovery, concretions in discourse and in existence, the relative value of things and ideas, how thought is practical, the measures of value in reflection, and some abstract conditions of the ideal; while in the second he passes to a consideration of phases of the social life, such as love, the family, industry, government and war, the aristocratic ideal, democracy, and patriotism.

From Messrs. R. A. Everett & Co., Ltd.—'Coverpoint's Cricket Annual: Fact, Fun, and Fiction from the Cricket Field,' by the Author of 'The History of the Test Matches.' Statistics and cricketing stories are attractively interwoven in this little unpretentious volume, and lovers of the national game will find it congenial company for an odd half-hour. In one of the concluding chapters the author discusses the much debated question of the paid amateur, and he also advocates a public schools championship.

From Messrs. Funk & Wagnalls.—'The Jewish Encyclopedia,' Vol. X. We have on more than one ocasion referred to this colossal undertaking, which is now within sight of completion. The present volume contains articles on subjects from Philipson to Samoscz, and it is in every respect a worthy successor to the volumes that have previously been issued. Scholarship, lucidity, and comprehensiveness are the leading characteristics of the work; many of the most noted scholars of the world have contributed to its pages, more than four hundred specialists having been engaged by the distinguished Editorial Board. Among the most important articles we may mention the following: 'Philo Judaeus,' by the late Professor Siegfried and Dr. J. Z. Lauterbach; 'Phylacteries,' by Dr. Ludwig Blau and Dr. Emil G. Hirsch; 'Plants,' by Dr. Immanuel Löw; 'Poetry,' by various writers; 'Prague,' by Dr. Schulim Ochser (beautifully illustrated); 'Prayer-Books,' by Judah David Eisenstein (containing several facsimiles of the highest interest); 'Reform Judaism,' by Dr. Emil G. Hirsch and Dr. David Philipson; 'Rome,' by Dr. Schulim Ochser; 'Rothschild Family,' by Mr. Joseph Jacobs; 'Russia,' by various writers; and 'Saadia B. Joseph,' by Dr. Wilhelm Bacher. The publishers deserve the warmest thanks of all writers and students the world over for this truly important work; it has been carried out on generous lines, and it is as near perfection as any human undertaking well can be.

From Mr. Alexander Gardner, Paisley.—'The Lady of Hirta, a Tale of the Isles: being the Narrative of the Reverend Ferchard Ross, A.M.,' now set forth for the first time and edited by W. C. Mackenzie, F.S.A. Scotl. All the trouble in this story arises from a poor lady who is desperately ill-treated by her husband, and who is succoured by a young minister, whose efforts would avail little were they not aided by men of greater courage and physical prowess. The lady is immured in one of the islands of the Hebrides group, and it is from this prison that all the endeavour is made to rescue her. But there is a subsidiary plot, in which the hero and a fascinating creature of high degree figure, which is equally of interest, and to young and romantic readers will no doubt furnish the chief attraction of the novel. Some close studies of Scottish character—notably 'Red Sandy,' who loves a 'bit tuilzie' as he values his own life and is always keen for a 'fecht'—are also deserving of mention. The story will chiefly interest readers well acquainted with life north of the Tweed.

From Mr. William J. Hay, Edinburgh.—'Scotland and Presbyterianism Vindicated,' by T. D. Wanliss. Enthusiasm is always an admirable thing, and of this quality Mr. Wanliss has a large store. He has written a booklet of one hundred pages, consisting entirely of an adverse review of the third volume of Mr. Andrew Lang's 'History of England.' In a prefatory note the publisher is careful to explain that the author 'is not personally acquainted with Dr. Lang, and that his criticism of that gentleman's historical views arises entirely from a desire to vindicate his country's national honour.' Mr. Wanliss evinces some cleverness and considerable daring; occasionally he scores a point, but we are afraid he is fighting a battle with the odds heavily against him.

From Messrs. Headley Bros., 14 Bishopsgate Street Without, E.C.—'Between the Cupolas: a "Light-and-Airy" Record,' by W. Those of us who have a keen and perhaps rather sentimental remembrance of our school days, the boys we chummed with, or admired from a distance, or dreaded, and the course of training to which we were subjected, will, we are sure, find much interest in this volume. More especially does it treat of the question of school education from a literary point of view, and the chapters on 'Choice Selections,' 'The Grammar Hour,' 'The Essay Society,' and 'The Ineligible Elegy' are certain to elicit a warm response in many a reader's mind. Full well does the present writer remember the treatment meted out to Shakespeare at his own school, but then how could any boy be expected to recite intelligibly such an emotional passage as Othello's lament over Desdemona, when trained by an unimaginative master? It was the purest burlesque.

From the Health Resorts Association, 2 Gray's Inn Road, E.C.—'Malvern,' 'Rhyl, 'Southend and Westcliff on Sea,' 'Bexhill.' These little handbooks, issued under the editorship of George W. May, may chiefly be regarded as advertisements for the various resorts, and are bright with photographic illustrations and suitable information. From a practical point of view they should admirably fulfil their purpose, and assist many a prospective holiday-makers in determining his destination.

From Mr. Charles H. Kelly.—'Man's Place in Creation.'—'The Atonement of Christ.'—These two sixpenny books contain lectures delivered to the public in the Central Hall, Manchester, by various ministers and laymen. They deal with practical questions of Christian life, and deserve the attention of thoughtful readers.

From Messrs. P. S. King & Son.—'Institutions for Thrift,' by E. W. Brabrook, C.B., F.S.A. Early this year Mr. Brabrook delivered two lectures before the University of Liverpool School of Training for Social Work; they are now printed in a cheap and convenient form so that they may reach a wider public. Institutions for thrift by way of investment and insurance are discussed in a practical and helpful manner, and the author proves himself a thorough master of his subject.

From Mr. John Lane.—'Blanchefleur the Queen,' by Ashmore Wingate. It is no light task the author has assayed in this volume. Looking back on the heroes of France in the times of Charlemagne, he says.—

And I would write the epic of their land,
With cantos, wave on wave like armies strong,
And in my verse should that same angel stand,
In her winged nakedness, while battle song
Chased battle song. But hastening outwards, I
Viewed no new scene. And passed each statue by,
The image of white life, struck with eternity.

This quotation will furnish a fair idea of the poetic merit of Mr. Wingate's book. Though of unequal flight, his muse often reaches a high standard of thought and expression, and is always refined and tuneful.

From Mr. John Long.—'Prince and Tom: Some Incidents in the Life of a Dog and a Cat, as narrated by Prince, the Terrier,' by George G. Brentforde. Though marked by no great humour or keenness of observation, lovers of animals are certain to find these episodes of dog and cat life very pleasant reading. Prince, the terrier, who acts as spokesman, is a remarkably intelligent fellow, and the account of his adventures with Tom, and the influences exerted over their lives by various 'two-legs,' is a wonderful record of canine sagacity. The volume contains eight illustrations by E. Dudley Tennant.

From Mr. John Long.—'Children of Earth, by Sidney Paternoster. It may be said at once that this is not a book to be left lying about for all and sundry to pick up. It is strong meat, and, while admitting that it has power, the general impression left is an unpleasant one. This is mainly due to the fact that, with the exception of Lossie Grove—as pitiful a victim of cruel fate as can well be imagined—the men and women introduced have little real worth, and therefore fail to appeal to us. Frank Dalton and Robert Rawlins, the Rector of Graysbourne's curate, are rivals for the love of Ruth Ryeland. She loves the former, but by the machinations of the latter is compelled to marry him. In the process of working out his nefarious schemes the curate gets Philip Grove and his daughter Lossie turned out of the village, and the remainder of the story is chiefly concerned with them. Frank by chance comes in contact with Lossie, falls in love with her, again to find a rival in Nicholas Ryeland, as profligate a blackguard as one could desire not to meet; and the sufferer is the girl, and only the girl. She certainly wins our sympathy from first to last, and stands out a very real and lovable personage. Her father, too, is well drawn, scoundrel though he be; and, indeed, the character drawing as a whole is very clear and skilful. They are, however, miserable specimens of humanity, and even Frank Dalton, who is the best of them, has not much moral worth to boast of, and that fate at last brings him happiness gives us no particular satisfaction. Such a thorough scoundrel as the curate Rawlins, who afterwards becomes the Rector, it is to be hoped is far to seek either in the Church or out of it. Perhaps the very fact that the characters make us angry goes a considerable way towards proving that there is reality and much power in the work.

From the same.—'Horses I have Known,' by G. G. (H. G. Harper). This is a good volume for a sportsman's library, and all lovers of horses will read it with pleasure. The sketches, for they can hardly be called stories, are of unequal merit, but those who hunt or race will certainly find some amongst those horses described which will bring back pleasant memories, and, if he be old, will help him to find youth again for awhile. The book is admittedly written for such readers, and it is not to depreciate it when we say that the reader who does not hunt and is inclined to look upon racing as a pastime of the devil's making, is hardly likely to find much interest in it.

From the same.—'A Daughter of the Manse,' by Sarah Tytler. We are not particularly impressed with this story concerning the conflict which raged in the Church of Scotland between the Moderates and the Non-Intrusionists, and which caused dissension between Dr. Menzies and his brother, the Commodore, in the little village of Rowanden. The tale moves so slowly that one is apt to lose interest in it, nor does the mystery concerning Benjie help it along much. The author has, however, a very considerable following, and this picture of the time, and a certain delicacy in the handling of the various characters, may appeal to them, especially if they be Scotch.

From Mr. Thomas Law.—'The Model Citizen,' by C. Silvester Horne, M.A. A good sermon is a rarer thing than a good poem; poor sermons exist in numbers that more than equal the demand. Mr. Horne's expositions are neither good nor bad; they are simply mediocre. Much of what he says surely did not require saying—it is all so patently obvious to the most superficial of minds. His literary style is undistinguished; it is unfortunately marred by occasional levities which to our mind are in bad taste.

From Messrs. Alexander Moring, Ltd.—'Nights at the Opera: Gounod's "Faust," Bizet's "Carmen," and Mozart's "Don Giovanni,"' by Francis Burgess, F.S.A. These three artistic booklets will no doubt be largely bought by those whose knowledge of operatic music is but limited. Each booklet is divided into five chapters, dealing respectively with 'The Composer,' 'The Story and its Sources,' 'The Production of the Opera,' 'The Characters Represented,' and 'Music and Story Side-by-side.' Mr. Burgess has done his work adequately, the information he gives being what is most required by beginners.

From Messrs. S. W. Partridge & Co.—'The Pathway to the Glory,' by a Banker. This is a volume of sermons by a gentleman who, while desiring to remain anonymous, gives the reader a full-page portrait of himself. He has, it seems, visited the Holy Land, and his travels have made a profound impression upon his mind; his sermons are sincere and vigorous, though commonplace in tone and expression.

From the Religious Tract Society.—'The New Testament and the Pentateuch,' by C. F. Nösgen, D.D. Translated from the German by C. H. Irwin, M.A. This little book is scholarly and well worth reading. Professor Nösgen, in his discussion of the statements of Jesus and His Apostles about the Pentateuch, evinces wide reading, and his arguments commend themselves to the reader by reason of their sanity and clearness.

From the same—'Words of Help on Conduct and Belief,' by Various Writers. Such subjects as 'Why do we Believe?' 'Gambling,' 'Marks of Manhood,' and 'Newspapers and Newspaper Reading' are more or less ably considered in this volume, which will doubtless be found helpful to very many. With such writers as the Bishop of Durham, the Dean of Norwich, the Rev. Alexander McLaren, and the Rev. John Watson ('Ian Maclaren') readers have a wide choice. The tone of simplicity adopted in most of the papers is to be commended.

From Messrs. George Routledge & Sons, Ltd.—'How to Use a Camera,' by Clive Holland. This little work, written with a desire to be simple rather than profound, will be found of great use by the beginner, and should prove of practical service. It deals with the subjects of hand cameras, the art of picture making, exposures, developers and development, printing processes, burnishing, and other topics which will have great attraction for amateur photographers Suitable illustrations are included.

From the Scientific Press, Ltd.—'Hints to Nurses on Tropical Fevers', by S. F. Pollard, Sister, Army Nursing Service Reserve. Miss Pollard dedicates her little book to her fellow-nurses, and it has been written with the intention of preparing them for work in the Crown Colonies and elsewhere. After dealing in a chatty and interesting manner with the preparation for going abroad, she devotes separate chapters to malaria, dysentery, liver abscesses, cholera, beri-beri, &c. A bright, informing, and useful volume.

From Mr. T. Fisher Unwin.—'Tom Gerrard, by Louis Becke. Readers who are already familiar with this author's former books relating to colonial life and adventure will find the one now before us has the same abiding merits in the conception of character and descriptive power. The hero of the novel is a generous and unselfish Queensland squatter, who, after the tragic deaths of his father and mother, then becomes the owner of Ocho Rios, an outlying station in that colony. Owing to the impoverishment of his step-sister, Elizabeth Westonley, and sudden death of her husband (consequent upon the total failure of the Dacre Bank), Gerrard receives the widow into his home, together with that of his deceased sister's only child, Mary Rayner, and an orphan boy, named 'Jim Coll,' the two latter being devotedly fond of their 'Uncle Tom.' The hero's afterwards perilous adventure with an alligator, resulting in terrible injuries, his subsequent escape from a violent death, planned by a jealous friend, Randolph Aulin, abetted by ruffianly confederates, together with his happy marriage with Kate Fraser, the daughter of an ex-judge and successful miner, and graphically told. It is a book well worth reading.

From Messrs. Valentine & Sons, Ltd.—'Picturesque Ayrshire,' by William Harvey, F.S.A.Scot. This is a volume of 'The Shire Series,' under the general editorship of A. H. Millar, F.S.A.Scot., and it is to be thoroughly recommended, not only to visitors to Ayrshire, but also to the natives. It is not a guide book in the true sense, and will be found much more interesting than such books usually are. The district covered is one of much literary and historic interest, and is especially connected with Burns, a solid recommendation to very many of us. There are some three dozen full-page illustrations which naturally increase the value of the book.

From Messrs. Ward, Lock & Co., Ltd.—'Whitewash,' by Ethel Watts Mumford. The excitement of this novel, which is of no inconsiderable kind, arises from the doings of an unscrupulous Pole, who, having robbed an aristocratic French Countess of her jewels when on a pilgrimage with her invalid child to the shrine of St. Anne of Auray, in Brittany, next proceeds to New York to carry on his nefarious schemes. Here he meets with a young girl scarcely less deceitful than himself, but as she falls in love with him the plausible adventurer has matters pretty well his own way. Danger does not proceed from this quarter, but through the efforts of an American girl who happens to have been staying at the same inn in Auray when the robbery took place, and has caught a full view of the culprit's face. The wily Pole defends himself with great dexterity—mainly through his ladylove—for some time, but is ultimately put to death by his former victim, the Countess, who has conveniently gone mad for the purpose. The story has the advantage of several excellent illustrations by F. H. Townsend which do much to emphasise the dramatic character of the various situations.

Messrs. John Wright & Co., Bristol.—'Poisonous Plants of all Countries, with the Active Chemical Principles which they Contain and the Toxic Symptoms produced by each Group,' by A. Bernhard Smith. The author has manifestly taken great pains in the compilation of this little work, and in many ways it should prove useful to the medical scientist. A full index affords a means of ready reference.

NEW EDITIONS.—Messrs. Macmillan & Co., have issued a new and revised edition of that excellent work, Stage VI. of 'Object Lessons in Elementary Science, based on the Scheme issued by the London School Board,' by Vincent T. Murché, F.R.G.S. In this many improvements have been introduced, and the book generally has been thoroughly overhauled. — The daintily equipped 'King's Classics,' published by Alexander Moring, Ltd., and so efficiently looked after by Professor Gollancz, has been enriched by the addition of 'The Nun's Rule,' being the Ancren Riwle modernised by James Morton, with Introduction by Abbot Gasquet.—We have received from Messrs. Gale & Polden a copy of the second edition, revised to date, of 'Company Training Made Easy,' by Major H. C. Evans, a valuable work which should be of the greatest assistance to volunteers. The present edition has been supervised by Captain R. F. Legge, of the Leinster Regiment.—Major S. T. Banning has won a well-deserved reputation for his skill in preparing practical guides to military affairs, and we are glad to see his valuable book on 'Regimental Duties Made Easy' has now reached its third edition, a copy of which we have received from Messrs. Gale & Polden, Ltd.—Those who do not possess Captain John Drinkwater's 'History of the Siege of Gibraltar' should purchase a copy of the new edition just published by Mr. John Murray. The price at which it is issued is remarkably cheap. — The Sunday School Union have sent us a copy of 'The Teacher and the Class,' a volume of articles by various writers. To this new edition has been added a practical essay by Principal D. W. Simon, D.D.—Messrs. J. M. Dent & Co. have issued in the 'Classiques Français' a beautifully printed and in other ways daintily equipped edition of Octave Feuillet's 'Le Roman d'un Jeune Homme Pauvre,' with a Preface by M. Augustin Filon.—We have received from Messrs. George Newnes, Ltd., a copy of their very pretty edition of 'The Poems of Gray and Collins,' in limp leather binding suitable for the pocket.— To the now well-known 'King's Classics series the De la More Press have added the 'Memoirs of Robert Carey, Earl of Monmouth,' appreciatively edited by G. H. Powell. —A popular edition of 'Some Notable Hamlets,' by Clement Scott, with a new chapter on Mr. H. B. Irving by W. L. Courtney, of the Daily Telegraph, comes at an opportune time, and will be read with interest by those who have seen the recent impersonations of the melancholy Dane. The book is published by Messrs. Greening & Co.—With the publication of 'Lady Audley's Secret' Messrs. Simpkin & Co. have completed their new 'Author's Edition' of Miss Braddon's novels, which consists of fifty-eight volumes very neatly printed and bound.—A second and revised edition of Mr. H. W. Weguelin's small work on 'Carnations, Picotees and Pinks' has been published by Messrs. W. H. & L. Collingridge. The book is well illustrated with portraits of the best varieties, and is deserving of the attention of all lovers and growers of these flowers.

We have been favoured by Messrs. A. Constable & Co. with a copy of their new cheap edition of 'The Power of Darkness and other Plays,' by Count Leo Tolstoy, translated by Louise and Aylmer Maude. These plays were written by the gifted Russian litterateur in the years 1886-1889, and prove the author to be a most capable dramatist.

The new volume of Messrs. J. M. Dent & Co.'s Temple English Literature Series for Schools has just reached us. It is a good selection of 'English Poetry, Lyrical,' addressed to the 'child growing into youth,' edited by Arthur Burrell, M.A.Oxon., and is well adapted for the purpose proposed by both editor and publishers.

A copy of the new 'Popular Edition' of the late Samuel Smiles' work on 'The Huguenots, their Settlements, Churches, and Industries, in England and Ireland,' has been sent us by Mr. John Murray. The book in this cheaper form will doubtless create a fresh interest in the story of the colonising efforts of the heroic Flemish and French Protestant refugees during the sixteenth and seventeenth centuries.

PUBLICATIONS OF THE WEEK.

WITH AN INDEX OF AUTHORS, TITLES, AND SUBJECTS OF BOOKS IN ONE ALPHABET.

All books are in cloth when not otherwise described. When the word 'net' is printed against the price of a book it means that there is not the usual trade allowance. The words of the Index which are printed in italics refer to the name under which the title of a work appears in larger type. Publishers who observe the omission of a book from the list will confer a favour by sending a copy of the title to the office for insertion in the next number.

REGULATIONS.

1. BOOKS IN PRINT ARE NOT ADVERTISED FOR, but can only appear in the ordinary Column advertisements and at the usual scale rate. Every care is taken to prevent this rule from being infringed; but we cannot hold ourselves in any way responsible for occasional oversights. Subscribers are requested to make careful inquiry at the Publishers' before sending their lists for these Columns.

2. Collective advertisements are not admissible, except in the case of very old subjects, where it may naturally be supposed the Advertisers have a difficulty in obtaining the titles.

3. All lists should be sent to the Office, addressed to the 'Manager of the Publishers' Circular,' as early in the week as possible, and in no case later than Wednesday morning. Advertisements received too late for one issue (i.e., on Thursday) are not inserted in the next unless express instructions to this effect are given. This is to avoid any misunderstanding arising from charging for extra lines.

4. Every Annual Subscriber has the privilege of an Advertisement of four titles free each week in these columns, and can have extra titles at 3d. per title prepaid. For Non-Subscribers a uniform rate of 3d. per title prepaid is charged, the name and address being counted as one title.

5. The Proprietors reserve to themselves the right of refusing any Advertisement.

TISSOT'S = = OLD = = = = TESTAMENT.

IN TWO VOLUMES.

Large 4to. cloth extra, £6 6s. net.

NOTE.—Following on the extraordinary success obtained by the publication of 'THE LIFE OF OUR LORD JESUS CHRIST,' M. Tissot desired, as the crowning work of his life, to add to the 'New Testament' Illustrations a series on the 'Old Testament,' and in this manner to supply illustrations which cover the whole period of the Bible history. This work, of surpassing interest to all students of the Bible story, contains nearly Four Hundred illustrations from M. J. James Tissot's original drawings. A large proportion of these are faithful reproductions in colour from the original drawings. The letterpress is in English only.

'M. Tissot's scheme of colour, with its bright, barbarous touches in raiment and furniture, is no less telling than the accomplishment of his drawing.'—Scotsman.

'There are few men of modern times who have so well depicted the deep and solemn purport of the Bible story.'—Pall Mall Gazette.

ARE BOOK REVIEWS DOOMED?

Although the value of what is known as 'expert evidence' in our courts of law is neutralised by the fact that one side can always call as much of it as the other, still if we were on a jury, and the editor of the Spectator was called upon to give evidence in a case concerning book reviewing, we should expect what he said to have great weight, and that—unless the editor of the Athenæum was produced by the 'other side'—the Spectator would win.

And yet we venture to think that the editor of the Spectator missed with both barrels—first, with his right in his issue for July 15, and then with his left in that for July 22—in his comments and assertions with respect to the effect of the recent case of Thomas v. Bradbury, Agnew & Co. The editor of the Spectator, ex cathedra, says that for a reviewer to say that a writer has 'mangled' his subject 'is now forbidden by law,' and that it is also now illegal to use the time-worn argument that a biographer has 'added a new terror to death.'

It would be a very serious thing for publishers of books and of reviews in which books are noticed if the effect of the libel action in question is as stated by the editor of the Spectator. 'It cannot, indeed, be denied,' he says, 'that the review was highly unfavourable to Mr. Moy Thomas's method, and to the book which he had produced by means of it. Mr. Lucy thought Mr. Moy Thomas's treatment of his subject "banal" and "pompous," his use of his material misleading—and he said so.'

What the Public Expect from a Literary Journal.

'As we began by observing, we have not the slightest intention of disputing the verdict of the jury, or of denying that to print a review containing this language is to publish a libel. We would only ask the public to consider the position in which this doctrine places themselves and us. They are accustomed to expect from a literary journal a candid expression of opinion on the merits of the principal books that appear. If to do this must mean in some cases, and may mean in every case, that the proprietors of the journal will have to pay heavy damages, and possibly still heavier costs, how can the public expect to get what they have hitherto looked for? . . . If the law remains unchanged a cautious editor will be compelled to look at each book for himself to form a rough, and very possibly an inaccurate, estimate of its value, and to send out for review only such books as he sees his way to praising.'

If this view is correct the position is indeed serious. But is it correct? In the following number of the Spectator three correspondents take what we venture to say is, if a more commonplace, also a more commonsense and correct view of the whole matter. The action 'Thomas v. Bradbury & Co.' would probably never have been brought into court if the parties chiefly concerned, viz. the author and the reviewer, had been perfect strangers. Unfortunately the author had no difficulty in showing that the reviewer was, to say the least of it, no friend of his; and unfortunately the reviewer emphasised this position when in the witness-box by some most unfortunate remarks, some of which he was obliged to apologise for.

We cannot understand why the editor of the Spectator should think a British jury should not be influenced when a reviewer gives them, as a reason for writing a damning review, his wish to give 'a struggling journalist a lift up.' Mr. Lucy withdrew the remark, but he could not withdraw its effect—it was much too cynical for genial 'Toby, M.P.'

We cannot believe that the editor of the Spectator is right in his contention that, if this case is to be a precedent, 'book reviews will tend to become either colourless or laudatory.' When all the circumstances are similar the result will be the same, no new precedent has been established. The pious wish, 'Oh that mine enemy would write a book!' is some four thousand years old. The moral of it all is that if he does write one, and you are asked to review it in Punch, 'Don't.'

NOTES AND ANNOUNCEMENTS.

Mr. John Murray informs us that 'The Letters of Queen Victoria,' edited by A. C. Benson and Viscount Esher, K.C., cannot be ready before the beginning of next year. The letters cover the period between 1837 and 1861, a memorable one in the history of England and Europe, and the editors have naturally an immense mass of material to deal with. The work will be in two or more demy 8vo. volumes, and be illustrated with many photogravures.

Mr. Murray also announces 'The Military Life of H.R.H. the Duke of Cambridge,' written under the authority of the late Duke from documents in his own possession, by Colonel Willoughby Verner, late Rifle Brigade, assisted by Captain Erasmus Darwin Parker, late Manchester Regiment, with portraits, 2 vols., medium 8vo. Some two years before his death H.R.H. gave instructions for the preparation of this biography, which was carried out under his supervision until the time of his last illness.

Admirers of 'Benedictine' and the 'Attic in Bohemia' will be glad to learn that Mr. Lacon Watson has returned awhile from his excursions in fiction to the field of the short personal sketch and essay. 'Reflections of a Householder' is to be the name of his new volume, which Messrs. Brown & Langham will publish early in September. A limited edition, numbered and signed by the author, will also be published on handmade paper.

Mr. J. F. Meehan, bookseller, Bath, contributes to the Beacon for July another article in his 'The Famous Buildings of Bath and District' series; this one, No. 98, relates to Richard Whiting, the last Abbot of Glastonbury, who was hanged in chains on the famous Glastonbury Tor—one of Henry VIII.'s numerous victims.

Messrs. Cassell & Company publish a work entitled 'Cheap Dwellings,' edited by Paul N. Hasluck, editor of Building World, containing upwards of two hundred designs of actual cottages, villas, and bungalows erected in different parts of the United Kingdom at a low cost.

Messrs. Brown, Langham & Co. are publishing a new edition in a few days of 'Litanies of Life,' by Kathleen Watson.

There is no doubt the immense expense of the British Army, and the disheartening revelations of incapacity of so many of those in command of it, are keenly felt by the nation. In the Nineteenth Century and After for August are important articles on 'The Nation and the Army: the Responsibility of the Individual Citizen.' What a blessing it would be if Japan, when she has made peace with Russia, would lend us her military staff to put our Army affairs in order!

The Law Reports—which, since their commencement in 1865, have been published for the Council by a well-known firm of law publishers—will on and after January 1, 1906, be published by the Council themselves. In future all communications should be addressed to the secretary at the office of the Council.

The contents of the August number of The World's Work and Play, stretch from Motor-Racing and Motor Pleasure to 'The Newspapers of our Aliens.' Mr. Norman, M.P., writes strongly upon what he regards as the prejudice of magistrates against motorists; Mr. Lewis Hind continues his pictorial romance 'The Education of an Artist'; and 'Home Counties' deals with the problem of furnishing the country cottage. The new game 'Ju-Jitsu' is also illustrated with some striking instantaneous photographs of ladies. A prize competition for amateur photographers is a new feature announced in this magazine.

NEWSVENDORS' BENEVOLENT AND PROVIDENT INSTITUTION.

FESTIVAL, 1905.

Sir Horace Brooks Marshall, M.A., J.P., D.L., LL.D., a trustee and vice-president of this Institution, has kindly consented to preside at the 66th Anniversary Festival in aid of the funds and to advocate the objects of the Newsvendors' Benevolent and Provident Institution. The reception and dinner will be held at De Keyser's Royal Hotel, Victoria Embankment, on Tuesday evening, October 24.

It is anticipated that a large and representative assembly of the members of the news trade will foregather to support Sir Horace in maintaining and extending the benevolent purposes of the Newsvendors' Institution as a monument worthy of the best traditions of the news trade. To this end Sir Horace has endeavoured to fix upon a date which he and the committee trust will be convenient to residents in Scotland, Ireland, the Provinces, and Metropolis. Mr. W. Wilkie Jones, 16 Farringdon Street, London, E.C., is the secretary.—Caxton Magazine.

THE JABBERWOCK.

The Jabberwock is the title of a new monthly magazine for boys and girls, edited by Brenda Girvin, and published, price 6*d.* net, by Messrs. Chapman & Hall. The Jabberwock has such a big budget of charmingly illustrated stories and articles suitable for boys and girls that he will become a welcome visitor in thousands of British homes. We can confidently recommend our friends the booksellers at home and in the colonies to introduce him to their customers. The aim of The Jabberwock is well described in the following verse from No. 1:

He'll take you into Wonderland,
He knows the way quite well,
By hills and dales you'll hear the tales
Dear Jabberwock can tell;
He calls us all—from Britain's Isles,
From regions far away,
So, hand in hand, to Storyland

HOW CARLYLE WAS TAKEN IN.

Carlyle's imaginative faculty probably brings us nearer to the living Cromwell than is possible with the method of uninspired scientific reconstruction from vestiges. But in many ways Carlyle was a bad editor. He tampered with the speeches, and, in a less degree, with the letters; and in the later editions not only relegated very important letters to an Appendix, but admitted the grossest forgeries. The story of the Squire Papers is not the least delightful of the curiosities of literature. William Squire, of Yarmouth, a humorous antiquarian, in 1847, after the publication of the first edition, informed Carlyle that he possessed the journal of an ancestor, Sam Squire (one of Cromwell's troopers), and other contemporary papers. He sent Carlyle, after some correspondence, copies of thirty-five letters purporting to come from Oliver's pen. These Carlyle printed in Frazer's Magazine for December 1847, with a personal guarantee of their 'indubitable authenticity.' The letters were attacked, but Carlyle described Squire as 'a person of perfect veracity, and even of scrupulous exactitude in details.' There was, in fact, nothing to vouch the letters, and Squire, when he sent the copies, announced the burning of the originals. He was interviewed first by Edward FitzGerald, and later by Carlyle, who found him 'a man of round rosy face, large grey eyes, full of innocence yet of unquiet vehemence. . . . Something radically honest, even brave and benevolent, was in the man's look, nay something blowsy and almost jolly.' Squire pretended to be half mad, and explained his mental state by the fact that as a boy his skull had been broken 'into thirty-seven pieces.' The whole thing was a monstrous practical joke, possibly concocted by Landor:

'Carlyle had been taken in by an imposture which did not deceive the dull antiquaries on whom he had poured such scorn. The hater of shams had seen the impostor face to face and taken him for a true man. Squire's ignorance was merely assumed, Squire's craziness only a device for avoiding inconvenient questions. The thirty-five unpublished letters of Cromwell were as fictitious as the thirty-seven pieces of Squire's skull. And that eminent humorist, having avenged Dryasdust, emigrated to New Zealand, where, some twenty years later, he closed in peace those "large grey eyes, full of innocence."'

The supplement to this edition contains one hundred and forty-five letters from Cromwell's pen, besides some twenty speeches and a few other documents not comprised in the original collection. For the most part Carlyle's 'embellishments' have been retained, but they have all been indicated, and the seventeenth-century language has been restored. These extensive additions to the letters and speeches bring their author before us with the intimacy of almost personal contact. Carlyle was undoubtedly right when he insisted on the publication of all authentic letters, however apparently unimportant. It was by means of detail that Carlyle was enabled to give the world his extraordinary living portrait of the great Protector, and the mass of correspondence here for the first time collected together adds to the reality of the presentment. In his letters Cromwell lives in a way that belongs to few other great historical characters.—From a review in the Spectator of Messrs. Methuen's new edition of Carlyle's 'Letters and Speeches of Oliver Cromwell,' edited by S. C. Lomas.

The 'Hatzfeldt Letters,' written by Count Paul Hatzfeldt, German Ambassador in London from 1885 to 1901, to his wife, translated from the French originals, to be published by Mr. Murray, give a series of very graphic word-pictures from the point of view of a diplomatist of the scenes of action of the terrible events of the Franco-German war of 1870-71.

The letters are composed in a pleasant, conversational style. They abound in interesting details concerning old Kaiser Wilhelm the First, the Emperor Napoleon, the Crown Prince of Prussia, Prince Friedrich Karl, Bismarck, Moltke, Roon, Blumenthal, and many other persons of historical and social note. Count Hatzfeldt is sometimes very frank and severe in his remarks about the French Government and the character of the French people.

General Reitte's mission to King Wilhelm and the drawing up of the latter's reply to Napoleon after Sedan; Bismarck's agitation after Mars-la-Tour, where his sons were wounded and reported to him as dead; Hatzfeldt's own annoyance at the eccentric ideas of the Americans concerning the usages of war during the siege of Paris; his scathing remarks anent French generals, politicians, and the populace; the negotiations with Thiers; the author's spirited description of the closing scenes; are only a brief selection of the titles of the word-pictures above referred to.

RUSSIA AND REVOLUTION.[*]

In Russian political history the antagonism between autocracy and the rights of the people ever looms large. It is the relation of a long series of struggles for freedom, the right to have a voice in the government of the country, and to enjoy some of the advantages of life. Unfortunately, also, it is the record of a line of irresolute, vacillating rulers, at one moment disposed to listen to the complaints of the people, at another hopelessly under the influence of bureaucracy. When Peter the Great, as Mr. Zilliacus in his extremely interesting work on the revolutionary movement in Russia points out, guided his Empire into the stream of Western civilisation he had little thought that the European ideas and culture so imperceptibly introduced were to become the seeds of a social revolution which in our day has shaken Tsardom to its foundation. Peter had probably not the remotest intention of relaxing any of the vigorous hold over his subjects bequeathed to him by his ancestors the Tartars, and yet by his action he unwittingly set a movement on foot that eventually was to assume the most formidable dimensions. The reigns of his successors, Alexander I., Nicolas I., and Alexander II. were each distinguished by a wavering policy which did more to foment the mischief than allay it, and the early years of Alexander II.'s rule, during which he showed a disposition to make needed reforms, are especially in contrast with the later period of his sovereignty when he again fell under the sway of his autocratic advisers. Alexander III., who followed him, was singularly unfitted, alike by constitution, education, and mental capacity, to hold the sceptre of office. His Imperial father held the singular view that only the eldest of his sons should receive the benefits of an intellectual training; hence, when the direct heir died, Alexander III. was quite unqualified for the distinguished position that lay before him. It has rightly been said that had he been born in a humble position of life he would not have been deemed worthy to fill even the most insignificant of village appointments.

In a clear, lucid manner, without passion of any kind, Mr. Zilliacus traces the gradual growth of the revolutionary movement in Russia during the reigns of three monarchs. He tells of the many political changes which took place; of the despotic fashion in which the people were treated, their grievances unheeded, and their sullen submission brought about by the harshest of enactments; of the various secret societies that at different times sprang into existence, beginning with the Association of Welfare, which was afterwards followed by the 'Southern' and 'Northern' Associations, the United Slavs, the 'Dekrabists,' the Nihilists, and others; how, no matter what repressive measures were taken against the agitators, whether they were imprisoned, tortured, or executed, the movement, being one of an intellectual growth, gradually gained ground, assuming more and more formidable dimensions, until it at length reached its present great strength. The story is quite thrilling in its intensity, and at Mr. Zilliacus's hands it receives admirable treatment. Throughout his narrative he shows a qualifying moderation of tone, and though, of course, it is quite easy to see where his sympathies lie, he is generally content to let the facts speak for themselves without any colouring from himself.

The book, we may mention, was originally written with the sole object of enlightening the people of Finland, among whom there existed a scantier knowledge of the revolutionary movement in Russia than elsewhere. In the Finnish Grand Duchy, as the author points out, the loyalty of the people to the sovereign, fostered by the fidelity of the successive Russian rulers to the compact entered into by Alexander I. with the Finnish 'Estates,' had always been too sincere to suffer any sympathy to be entertained for those who opposed Tsardom in Russia; and it was reserved for Nicolas II. to break the pledges of his predecessors and to cause Finland to take sides with the oppressed. Mr. Zilliacus is a prominent member of the Finnish party of active resisters, to which fact, and to the position he occupies in the councils of the Russian Revolutionary party, may to some extent be attributed the great importance attached to his work on its first publication in Sweden and Germany.

COMPULSORY SOCIABILITY.

My own belief is that everyone has a perfect right to choose his own circle, and to make it large or small as he desires. It is a monstrous thing to hold that if an agreeable or desirable person comes to a place, one has but to leave a piece of pasteboard at his door to entail upon him the duty of coming round till he finds one at home, and of disporting himself gingerly, like a dancing bear among the teacups. A card ought to be a species of charity, left on solitary strangers, to give them the chance of coming, if they like, to see the leaver of it, or as a preliminary to a real invitation. It ought to be a ticket of admission, which a man may use or not as he likes, not a legal summons. That anyone should return a call should be a compliment and an honour, not regarded as the mere discharging of a compulsory duty. . . . The one thing that is fatal to all spontaneous social enjoyment is that the guests should, like the maimed and blind in the parable, be compelled to come in. The frame of mind of an eminent Cabinet Minister whom I once accompanied to an evening party rises before my mind. He was in deep depression at having to go; and when I ventured to ask his motive in going, he said, with an air of unutterable self-sacrifice, 'I suppose that we ought sometimes to be ready to submit to the tortures we inflict on others.' Imagine a circle of guests assembled in such a frame of mind, and it would seem that one had all the materials for a thoroughly pleasant party.—From 'From a College Window,' in the Cornhill Magazine for August.

BOOKSELLERS' PROVIDENT INSTITUTION.

At the monthly meeting of the board of directors of the Booksellers' Provident Institution, held on Thursday, July 20, 1905, Charles J. Longman, Esq., in the chair, the sum of £99 was voted to members and widows of members. One member was elected, and three fresh applications for membership were proposed.

ROYAL BOOK-PLATES.

A fascinating by-path of art is that of ex-libris, as the true connoisseur of the subject speaks of his book-plates, and once again the annual exhibition, held this week at the Westminster Palace Hotel, of the Society devoted to the cult brought together a number of very charming examples, old and new.

A place of honour is assigned to the Royal book-plates, designed by Mr. W. P. Barrett and engraved by Messrs. John & E. Bumpus. That of the Queen has been, by her gracious permission, shown before, and it embodies the association of Great Britain and Denmark. At the top her Majesty's love of music is shown by some bars of notation, and below are classics, over which a dog keeps faithful watch, while the centre is occupied by miniature views of Windsor Castle and Elsinore. The plate of the Princess Victoria is also not new, but is a graceful and poetic one, having a view of the sea as symbolising life, and a cross with the dove, emblematic of spiritual aspirations. The Prince of Wales has recently honoured Mr. Barrett with a commission to execute a new one for himself and for Prince Edward and Prince Albert, and these, exhibited for the first time, attracted much interest. That for his Royal Highness is strictly armorial, having the coat of arms, the supporters, and the motto heraldically correct, while it contains, too, the plumes and the rose of York. It bears the words, 'The Library of George Frederick Ernest Albert.' For the two young princes an oval wreath, composed of roses, shamrocks, and thistles, has been adopted, having in the centre the initial A. or E. prettily decorated.

Ladies often embody some favourite hobby or interest in their plates, and that of the Duchess of Bedford has a Siamese cat in the centre, surrounded by guns and fishing tackle, and the motto 'For loan oft loses both itself and friend.' Lady Helen Vincent has a charming little etching of her rose garden, as, too, has Lady Camoys, and the Marchioness of Anglesey adds to hers a row of the works of her favourite authors. Viscountess Helmsley has miniatures of Warwick Castle, where she was born, and of her new home, with the lines: 'Home, the spot of earth supremely blest, A dearer, sweeter spot than all the rest.' The decorative French style was adapted by Mr. Barrett both for Lady Alington and Lady Wolverton, while that of Countess de Grey is of the Empire order. The Countess of Gosford, regarding her books as 'the medicine of the soul,' has a tiny representation of the Parthenon, and in the plate of Lady Dickson-Poynder comedy and tragedy are portrayed.—Daily Telegraph.

W. E. HENLEY THROUGH BOYISH EYES.

AND now what shall I say of Henley? I will not attempt the faintest sketch of the stricken poet. I will leave that task to those who are able to do him justice. I will only try to give a glimpse of my childhood's association in hospital with the tortured Trojan of Letters. I cannot remember meeting him for the first time; all I remember is that he lay in one bed and I, with Willie Morrison, lay in the other. He had a plenitude of sandy hair, which, with his rather large front teeth, gave him a fierce aspect. But I had no fear of Henley; we were comrades—he twenty-seven, we six and seven. I used to be very curious as to his writing so much, and asked him who he wrote to. He told me his grandmother. Which reply I thought satisfactory, and considered him an exemplary grandson. Henley was very kind to us, telling us stories and singing droll ditties, many of them, I believe, original. . . . I remember once discoursing in all seriousness with Henley on babies. I stoutly maintained, in face of all his scepticism, that doctors had a monopoly of the baby trade, and mothers had nothing to do but order them, stating whether they were to be black or white, boys or girls, one or two. In proof I told him the name of the doctor who enjoyed the sole agency of providing brothers and sisters for me. Henley laughed heartily, but desisted from upsetting my theory of 'the baby as a commodity.' —From 'A Blurred Memory of Childhood,' in the Cornhill Magazine for August.

FEAR AND DISTRUST OF BOOKS IN RUSSIA.

A FAVOURABLE sign of the times in Russia is the appearance of a new edition of the famous novel, 'What's to be Done?' written half a century ago by Tchernishevsky, the radical publicist, critic, and reformer. The book was forbidden almost as soon as it had seen the light on account of its heterodox tendencies. In spite of being suppressed it found its way into two English translations. Now it is republished without objection from the censor.

This fact, in connection with other symptoms, and especially with the trend of the testimony and proposals submitted to the Kobeko Commission on the press laws and the desirable amendments of the same, is regarded by Russian journalists as an indication of a real and healthy change of Government policy with regards to books and periodical literature, including the daily press. Writers have had a good deal to say lately about the 'distrust of books' in Russia, the suspicion and presumption of injury and mischief with which the Government has viewed the product of the national intelligence plus the printing press. A writer in the St. Petersburg Novosti, in urging 'trust in books,' gives the following facts:

'Books, like newspapers, are divided into two classes: those that may be published without preliminary censorship, and those that must be submitted in advance, in manuscript, to the local censor. Even the first class is in reality subject to censorship, for several copies of each printed book must be handed to the censor before any are placed on the market. Whatever book he finds objectionable, politically or morally, he may declare illegal, confiscating or burning the whole edition. In the last forty years some censors, by keeping single copies of prohibited books for strictly private use, have accumulated libraries of the greatest value and intellectual interest to educated Russia, and some of these rare volumes command, at "private sales," high premiums.

'Instead of one censor, the writer and publisher have to reckon with no fewer than eight different censors, representing as many official departments. Thus there are eight gauntlets to run, seven tests to undergo, and each censor is a law unto himself, following his own notions, whims, and prejudices.

'Finally, when a book at last obtains the requisite authorisations and reaches the public, it encounters another array of difficulties. Libraries are not permitted to purchase and circulate even the censor-ridden books. Many, in fact, are expressly prohibited to the libraries, the idea being that what may be safe in the small circles of the well-to-do intelligent may be dangerous in the hands of the "people."

'Hence those who cannot buy books, or borrow them, are deprived of the privilege of reading some of the best and most progressive and stimulating productions of the present or the past. Many Russian classics are excluded from the libraries.

'It is stated in St. Peterburg papers that the publishers have all demanded the complete abolition of the book censorship and full liberty to issue any book they see fit, subject to prosecution in court under general laws safeguarding public morality, order, &c. The Commission proposed a compromise as follows: That all books should be passed upon by the Ministry of Foreign Affairs, and such as are found politically injurious or revolutionary should be turned over for examination and judgment to the National Academy of Science, a body of which almost every distinguished author is a member. The Academy, however, promptly declined this function. It declared that it could not undertake to apply official, political, governmental, or other non-literary and non-scientific and non-artistic standards to literature. It did not care to exercise "police functions" and become a governmental agency.

'The Commission is expected to recommend liberal changes in the laws as to the press, and remove the stigma of the "distrust of books."' — Translation made for the Literary Digest.

DEATH OF MR. R. BARNICOTT.

WE regret to have to record the death of Mr. Reginald Barnicott, senior member of the well-known firm of Messrs. Barnicott & Pearse, of Taunton. We hope to give some account of Mr. Barnicott and a portrait next week. He died of Bright's disease, after an illness of thirteen weeks.

KROPOTKIN ON LITERARY CRITICISM IN RUSSIA.

LITERARY criticism has in Russia certain special aspects. It is not limited to a criticism of works of art from the purely literary or æsthetic point of view. Whether a Rúdin (in Turgéneff's novel of that name), or a Katerína (in Ostróvski's drama, 'The Storm'), are types of real, living beings, and whether the novel or the drama is well built, well developed, and well written—these are, of course, the first questions considered. But they are soon answered; and there are infinitely more important questions which are raised in the thoughtful mind by every work of really good art: the questions concerning the position of a Rúdin or a Katerína in society; the part, bad or good, which they play in it; the ideas which inspire them, and the value of these ideas; and then—the actions of the heroes, and the causes of these actions, both individual and social. In a good work of art the actions of the heroes are evidently what they would have been under similar conditions in reality; otherwise it would not be good art. They can be discussed as facts of life.

Every class of the toiling masses which in other literatures would have appeared in novels as the background for events going on amid educated people (as in Hardy's 'Woodlanders') has had in the Russian novel its own painter. All great questions concerning popular life which are debated in political and social books and reviews have been treated in the novel as well.—'Russian Literature,' by P. Kropotkin.

A FORBIDDEN STYLE OF POSTING POST-CARDS.

THE Secretary to the Post Office requests it to be stated that numerous post-cards enclosed in transparent covers with the address written upon the enclosures have recently been observed in the post. Transparent covers are a sort of embarrassment to the Post Office, and the Postmaster-General has decided that correspondence sent in such covers, with the address written upon the enclosures, is to be withheld from delivery and sent to the Returned Letter Office, marked 'Contrary to regulations.'—Caxton Magazine.

Notices of Books

From Mr. B. T. Batsford.—'Modern Housing in Town and Country,' by James Carnes. One of the vital questions of our progressive age requiring early solution is that of the proper housing of the people. This question has been in some measure effectively tackled by the authorities of the town of Letchworth, at which place a Cheap Cottages Exhibition was duly opened by the Duke of Devonshire on July 25, and accounts of the opening ceremony, with particulars of the scheme, have already appeared in the public press. The author of this important quarto volume has striven to give the public a wide and very attractive view of the conditions of modern housing in England, as well as to provide a book of reference for architects, builders, engineers, surveyors, and all others interested in the subject. Mr. Carnes, who is a member of the Town Council of Leek, in Staffordshire, has had much practical experience and also efficient knowledge of the requirements of municipal bodies in this matter, from having himself erected in the town named a colony of workmen's dwellings, and hence his comprehensive work before us should receive due attention at the hands of all for whom it was specially written and designed. The book is well illustrated by examples of municipal and other schemes of block dwellings, tenement houses, model cottages, and villages.

From Messrs. Bemrose & Sons, Ltd.—'Garden Cities in Theory and Practice,' by A. R. Sennett, 2 vols. Mr. Sennett presents us with a book of intense interest in his 'Garden Cities.' In these two volumes he deals in an equitable and comprehensive manner with the latest words of science in relation to civic life. In this connection every point that can be raised—from the disposition of sewers to the planning of tennis-courts and the pulverisation of milk—is discussed with breadth of view and uncommon acumen, and settled with the finality which thorough knowledge of the subject in hand always gives. To read these pages is to imbibe enthusiasm, and make one long to assist in the sanitary regeneration of England. Should the proposed garden city in Hertfordshire be modelled on Mr. Sennett's excellent and truly economical plan, we are sure that the success which its designer craves would follow. We heartily commend these well-written, fully illustrated, and comprehensive volumes to the attention of our readers; they are certainly the most important that have yet appeared on this attractive subject.

From Messrs. Brimley, Johnson & Ince, Ltd.—'Tea-table Rhymes and Others,' by Leicester Romayne. Though the imitation of bygone versifiers is a little too apparent, this small volume of rhymes makes a distinct impression on the literary palate. The author's muse is of the sprightly, amorous variety that is bound to attract many listeners. The following will serve as a sample of his powers, though there are moments when the poet subdues himself to a less frivolous strain:

Come, Cecilia dear, I've raised the tent,
So let us spread the feast together;
Then take our tea with sunshine blent,
All in the pleasant summer weather.

There will you sit, the hostess dear,
Flashing your smiles above the tray,
And serve our friends with cups of cheer,
While I shall face you—far away!

A lovely sky, 'tis like a dream!
And minds me of that day—you know?
What! is a spider in the cream?
How things disturb one's reveries so!

From Messrs. Burns & Oates, Ltd.—'Outline Conferences for Children of Mary,' by Father J. Dahlmann. Translated from the German, with a Preface by Madame Cecilia. This little book is intended as a help for the busy priest who, in the pressure of his ordinary work, may find it difficult to obtain leisure for the preparation of the fortnightly or monthly instruction of his fellowship. The subjects chosen are suitable to the purpose, but naturally strike the Protestant as being somewhat narrow and rigid in their treatment.

From the same.—'Lives of the English Martyrs.' This volume deals with martyrs under Queen Elizabeth—martyrs who were 'declared blessed by Pope Leo XIII. in 1886 and 1895.' The various biographical accounts have been written by Fathers of the Oratory, of the Secular Clergy, and of the Society of Jesus, the whole being completed and edited by Dom Bede Camm, O.S.B. The book is of great interest, and will no doubt command a large sale.

From the same.—'Health and Holiness,' by Francis Thompson. Mr. Thompson is a distinguished poet whose writings have not yet received the recognition which rightly belongs to them; his verse is at once scholarly, suggestive, and thoughtful. The book before us is a prose essay dealing with 'the relations between Brother Ass, the Body, and his Rider, the Soul'; in these few pages are found all the qualities that distinguish his poetry. His essay is both a defence and a criticism of the ascetical tradition of Christianity; though it will probably raise objections from many readers, the controversy can never be bitter, for Mr. Thompson has the saving grace of humour and he has reason on his side.

From the Cambridge University Press.—'The Theory of Experimental Electricity,' by William Cecil Dampier Whetham, M.A., F.R.S. This book lays no claim to present a complete treatment of the science of electricity; it is intended to be suggestive rather than exhaustive, to be an Impressionist sketch rather than a picture that is finished. That is to say, it aims at bringing into prominence those features which have struck Mr. Whetham as essential, without wearying the reader with a mass of unnecessary detail. The object of the present undertaking has been to implant a thorough and clear knowledge of those physical principles necessary for an appreciation of the newer parts of the subject. The book is an organic structure, each part of which has a definite and inevitable relation with the whole, 'each section its bearing on the plot of the story'; it is written in a scholarly manner, and is evidently the work of a man who has not only scientific knowledge, but also considerable literary skill. There are chapters on Magnetism, Thermo-Electricity, Electro-magnetic Waves, Electrolysis, and Radio-Activity. Many figures illustrate the text, and the index has been well prepared.

From Messrs. T. & T. Clark, Edinburgh.—'Socrates,' by Rev. J. T. Forbes, M.A. The latest addition to the 'World's Epoch-Makers' series is in every way an excellent performance; it gives briefly, but succinctly, a more than adequate account of the life and teaching of Socrates, and touches with insight on the growth and development of philosophical thought previous to his birth. The biographical portion is written picturesquely and commands one's attention, while the analysis of his teaching—particularly that portion dealing with his 'method'—is painstaking and lucid. The book deserves the attention it will no doubt receive.

From Messrs. James Clarke & Co.—'The Story of the English Baptists,' related by John C. Carlile. Among the various Nonconformist sects the Baptists make claim to the honoured place of being the foremost among the pioneers of religious freedom in this country. However that may be, we know that in the past centuries of our history their efforts in that direction indeed show a brilliant record of 'fights for the faith.' This book, which is intended by the author solely as a popular history for young students of that branch of theology, as well as the general reader, is full of information relative to the 'noble dead' whose lives and deeds are an encouragement to those who still hold to the ancestral faith bequeathed to them Baptist life during the reigns of Charles I., Charles II., and James II., the striking careers of William Carey, the gifted missionary, John Bunyan, the inspired tinker, and the work of Charles H. Spurgeon, are instances of succinct narration. The volume contains some good portraits and other illustrations.

From Messrs. Archibald Constable & Co., Ltd.—'Rhymes of the East and Re-collected Verse,' by Dum-Dum. The humorous, semi-philosophic character of Dum-Dum's verse may confidently be relied upon to impress masculine readers who have passed the half-way milestone of life. Combined with a keen sense of the ludicrous, there is often a reminiscent pathos, if we may use such a term, that refines and chastens its effect. So many of the parodies met with since Calverley's day are crude and wellnigh vulgar in their treatment that it is quite a pleasure to light upon such thoroughly well-attuned efforts as Dum-Dum's 'Ode on a Distant Prospect of Getting to the Hills,' after Thomas Gray; 'The Wooing O'Tummas' in merry imitation of one of Robert Burns's most popular songs; and 'Sairey: Excerpts from an Incongruity,' after A. C. S. Readers who devote themselves to this volume may be assured of much quiet amusement, while at times their thoughts will wander into a pleasant, sentimental channel.

From the same.—'Archbishop Laud and Priestly Government,' by Henry Bell, M.A. It is now two and a half centuries since the death of Archbishop Laud; for two hundred years he lay in his grave unlamented, almost forgotten. It required the efforts of an ecclesiastic of similar disposition to arouse the interest of the public in a man whom Cardinal Newman chose to regard as a martyr and a saint. Mr. Bell, however, endorses the opinion of Laud's comtemporaries, and thinks of him with neither reverence nor respect. He quotes the words of Professor Mozley, who described Laud as 'a genuine priest, the priest in the political atmosphere, a priestly mixture of subtlety and humility, imperious and underhand at the same time.' Mr. Bell's study is written throughout in a judicious spirit; the author uses his material with dexterity and accuracy, and he fully engages the reader's attention from the first page to the last. Laud's amazing career, ending so tragically, must always arouse the interest if not the pity of students of history. There is an excellent photogravure of Van Dyke's well-known portrait.

From Mr. Edwin Dalton, 48 Aldersgate Street, E.C.—'Christian Beneficence, with

Special Reference to Systematic and Proportionate Giving,' the Hartley Lecture delivered to the Primitive Methodist Conference at Scarborough, June 14, 1905, by the Rev. Thomas Mitchell. The first three chapters of Mr. Mitchell's discourse are devoted to a definition of Christian beneficence, the lessons taught through the example of Jesus Christ, its ideal and inspiration, and a consideration of the practical results obtainable. From this he breaks into a wider channel and treats of several subjects less directly connected with his main theme. Such are the stewardship of wealth, the teachings of Scripture as shown in tithes, Jewish freewill offerings, and the various incidents of Gospel history, the measure of Christian liberality, the sin of covetousness, and so forth. 'The Church,' Mr. Mitchell concludes, 'has resources sufficient for all her needs and all her opportunities, and it is much to be regretted that defective views on the stewardship of wealth, and defective methods of calling forth its consecration to Christian objects, have so long crippled her usefulness and checked her progress.'

From Messrs. J. M. Dent & Co.—'Selborne,' by Herbert W. Tompkins. This book, which forms the new volume of this firm's dainty 'Temple Topographies,' is of course mainly concerned with the Hampshire village rendered so famous by Gilbert White, the naturalist, where he, in the apt words of Mr. Tompkins, 'passed so many years, the village that he knew and loved as he knew and loved no other, and where he was laid to rest when his eyes could no longer observe nor his pen record.' To those who intend visiting this neighbourhood of 'such sylvan loveliness of a romantic character' we cordially commend this book for their companion and guide.

From Messrs. Gale & Polden, Ltd.—'Company Drill Made Easy,' by Captain Lascelles Davidson. This little book will save those studying the official Infantry Training, with its constant references, infinite trouble. The illustrations produce clear pictures to the mind not easily forgotten and very difficult otherwise to describe, and the detail assigned to each individual can be seen at a glance.

From Mr. Alexander Gardner.—'Twenty Years on Ben Nevis,' by Wm. T. Kilgour. Twenty-two years ago a Meteorological Observatory was formally opened on the top of Ben Nevis, the highest meteorological station in the British Isles. After twenty years' work the Observatory has been closed, primarily owing to lack of funds. There seems, however, to be considerable difference of opinion as to the value of the work likely to be done there if it were continued, Lord Kelvin and Professor Schuster holding diametrically opposed views. Mr. Kilgour gives a brief, straightforward account of the life, work, and experiences of the observers. His eighteen chapters deal with all the aspects of his twenty years' experience, and we found his book very readable. The excellent photographs are a striking feature; some of them show remarkable effects of snow, mist, and frost.

From Messrs. Gay & Bird.—'Castles in Sand: an Effort to create Deeper Interest in a Fascinating Form of Recreation during Holidays at the Seaside,' by W. Poynter Adams. The mind is so imbued with the ordinary type of sand-castle building, in which we have all played an enjoyable part when children, that it is a little difficult to conceive a higher variety, erected, so to speak, on scientific principles. But Mr. Adams speedily shows us that this is quite practicable, and that with the construction of these miniature fortresses it is possible to combine an amount of genuine instruction. It is to be hoped, however, that the juvenile builders will not detect the presence of Mr. Barlow in their midst, or all the author's well-intentioned schemes are likely to 'gang agley.' Mr. Adams, who dedicates his work to 'the twelve thousand officers in the Boys' and Church Lads' Brigades and other voluntary workers among young people,' advocates the institution of sand-castle competitions, and the photographing of the castles when completed, as a means of maintaining the interest in this healthy recreation. His little book is suitably illustrated.

From Messrs. Gibbings & Co.—'Practical Hints on Painting, Composition, Landscape, and Etching,' by Henry F. W. Ganz. Valuable guidance is afforded in this volume to the art student, and Mr. Ganz's clear, experienced teaching is supplemented by a large number of illustrations from the pencil and brush of the author. The various Lessons deal with such important features of the artist's skill as the essentials in painting, 'colour' materials, the best methods of drawing a head from life, the 'rub-in,' value (otherwise known as 'tone'), portrait painting, the several stages in landscape work, water colours, etching, &c.

From Mr. Walter Hill, 67 Southampton Row, W.C.—'Where to Stay and What to See: being a Collection of Farmhouse, Seaside, and Country Lodging Lists in the Districts served by the Great Western, London and North-Western, Midland, Great Northern, Great Central, and Great Eastern Railway Companies, together with Useful and Interesting Information for the Artist, Antiquary, Angler, Tourist, and Holiday-maker.' The extended title of this volume sufficiently indicates the character of its contents, and it is only necessary to say that, though very much in the nature of an advertisement production, it undeniably supplies much helpful information for those still in doubt as to the scene of their holiday manœuvres. The book is well supplied with illustrations (a little delusive, as photographic reproductions are likely to be) and maps.

From Messrs. Houlston & Sons.—'Queen Rearing in England, and Notes on a Scent-Producing Organ in the Abdomen of the Worker-Bee, the Honey-Bees of India, and Enemies of the Bee in South Africa,' by F. W. L. Sladen. This will be found a very interesting little work for those engaged in bee culture, and the practical knowledge possessed by the author, combined with the explanatory character of the illustrations, have resulted in a manual that is distinctly enlightening.

From the same.—'Towns and Types,' by Mark Allerton. The articles in this paper-covered volume, reprinted for the most part from the columns of To-day and the Glasgow Evening Times, are of the superficial variety, occasionally relieved by a touch of smartness. Their general character may best be judged by a short quotation taken from the essay on 'London': 'The typical Londoner is a slight man, nicely dressed, with one ring too many, a pale complexion, and knowing eyes. He puts "Tatcho" on his hair, and swears by the Referee. He is a good fellow to meet, for he is courteous, polite, worldly-wise, with a fine sense of humour and a ready laugh. He calls you "Scotty," and thinks you wear kilts when at home and live on porridge and oatcake. . . . Half an hour after you meet him you will know his income, the name of his wife, and how he spends his Sundays.' This, in the words of the cover, is termed 'caustic criticism.'

From Messrs. Iliffe & Son.—No. 68 of the well-known 'Photo Miniature Series' deals exclusively with 'Decoration by the Aid of Photography.' That the camera readily lends itself to the effective illustration of magazine covers, &c., is, of course, apparent every day; but many other pleasing and useful applications are suggested—one, a photographic frieze, being particularly interesting. The numerous illustrations greatly enhance the value of this comprehensive little book. —The companion volume to this, No. 47, 'A Treatise on Printing Out Papers, with Full Instructions for the Making at Home of Printing Out Papers,' should be purchased as well, although we fear the majority of photographers prefer to buy their P.O.P. ready for use.

From Messrs. Jarrold & Sons.—'Time: the Enemy,' by H. A. Darlington. Although not without some good points, this novel is far too long and becomes wearisome. There is a sense of character in many of the persons introduced, and a certain old-fashioned method of dealing with the question of social status. The Thornton family is rather well done, especially Sallie; but the old father, a tradesman and proud of his calling, would hardly have consented to live on charity after his ruin: this is not in keeping with his character. Oscar Pelham, too, is unreal. The author has taken some trouble with him, but has only succeeded in making him a prig, which was not intended, we imagine. If this is a first book, there is promise in it; but the author must condense, and, having done so, go through the manuscript again with a thick blue pencil.

From Mr. John Long.—'The Suburbans,' by T. W. H. Crosland. Mr. Crosland's style of writing is too well known at this time of day for us to need attempt any description. This book is as amusing in its quaint abuse of everything suburban as the well-read books that have preceded it. The author knows his suburban inside out, and has, we fear, laid himself open to the charge that he is one of them, so thoroughly does he enter into their spirit and so heartily is he ashamed of it. In its own style it is as good as its predecessors—which is to say, that it will have very many readers.

From Messrs. George Newnes, Ltd. — 'Canadian Life in Town and Country,' by Henry J. Morgan and Lawrence J. Burpee. In some respects this may be regarded as the most interesting and important volume that has yet appeared in the 'Our Empire' series.

The ignorance exhibited by Britishers in regard to Canada, though of late years considerably modified, is still a matter for surprise among Colonials, and the present authors relate an instance of where a highly distinguished military man not long ago showed himself quite unfamiliar with the most ordinary natural features of the country. It is said also that the late Colonel Skinner, on going to Wimbledon in the early seventies in command of a rifle team from Ontario, was viewed with astonishment by many English visitors to the camp because he and his men were not copper-coloured! This ignorance, of course, is a thing of the past, but still there are many matters touching Canada on which the average English reader possesses erroneous ideas, and these he will find fully corrected in this interesting volume. In their description of the Dominion, its political and judicial systems, trade and commerce, militia, sports and amusements, educational facilities, literature and art, religious thought, &c., the authors show themselves complete masters of their subject, and the interest of the volume is further enhanced by several capital illustrations.

From the same.—Messrs. Newnes have added to their 'Devotional Series,' 'Of the Imitation of Christ, with the Book of the Sacrament,' translated by John Payn from the Latin of Thomas à Kempis. Notwithstanding the many editions of à Kempis now in the market, this very pretty and very useful edition will surely find a favourable place. The size, small fcp. 8vo., is so handy, and the leather cover so flexible and tempting.

From Messrs. Simpkin, Marshall, Hamilton, Kent & Co., Ltd.—'Thoughts after Business Hours,' by A City Man. The said thoughts concern such subjects as 'The Bliss of Ignorance,' 'The Advantages of Insignificance,' 'Success and Failure,' 'Plain Speaking,' 'The Power of Gentleness,' 'Unreflecting Beneficence,' &c. A 'City Man' has manifestly not allowed the hive of commerce to absorb all his attention.

From Messrs. Swan Sonnenschein & Co., Ltd.—'How to Deal with Your Broker,' by Henry Warren. 'Nothing is certain in Law or Speculation except the expense,' but Mr. Warren does his best to protect you from parting with money unnecessarily. His book is fairly comprehensive, and deals with the subject in a firm, vigorous manner; the reader who has no head for money and trade may find it a difficult matter to follow him in the intracacies of Stock Exchange methods, &c., but the man of affairs will derive pleasure and (we hope) material benefit by reading Mr. Warren's explanations and listening to his advice.

From the Tallis Press, 21 Temple Chambers, E.C.—'Smithy,' by Edgar Wallace. There is much humour, combined with no little sly criticism, in these sketches of 'Smithy's' military experiences. 'Smithy,' after his fashion, is as much of a character as Mr. Dooley, and expresses himself on regimental matters with the most refreshing frankness. The book is bound to create amusement.

From Messrs. Anthony Treherne & Co., Ltd.—'Lettres Choisies de Madame de Sévigné.' Clearly printed and prettily bound, this edition of Madame de Sévigné's letters in two small volumes that can readily be slipped into the coat pocket is likely to meet with much favour at the hands of English readers. Convenience of handling is everything nowadays in our popular literature, and in this respect 'The Little Library of French Classics' shows a marked superiority.

From Messrs. F. V. White & Co., Ltd.—'The Premier's Daughter,' by Alice and Claude Askew. This is a clever story, but it is not clever enough; the dialogue is forced, the psychology superficial. The daughter of a Premier may become engaged to a man without a name, and succour an escaped convict on Dartmoor—all things are possible to human nature; but that this particular woman, Beatrice Chevenix, behaved in this way we cannot believe. This is entirely the fault of the authors. The plot is good, it is well managed, and the dénouement is successfully brought about; but, unfortunately, not one of the characters lives.

From the same—'Fortune's Favourite,' by Katharine Tynan. The heroine of this interesting story is the youngest child in a family of eight daughters. Her mother, Mrs. Thomas Williamson, of Malplaquet Gardens, Kensington, has been left a widow with the sole care of them on a moderate income, and bravely faces the responsibilities resulting therefrom, being, as the author aptly says, 'not like most women, crushed by the burden that fell upon her.' Luckily, the daughters are subsequently fortunate enough to secure suitable husbands and depart with them to distant lands; but owing, however, to climatic conditions the grandchildren are sent back to England to be reared. Barbara—or, as she is familiarly named, 'Bab'—determines to remain with mother, and in due course, as a dutiful daughter, achieves the distinction of becoming 'Fortune's favourite.' Her unselfish devotion receives recompense at the hands of Mr. Selwood, an old and attached friend, who by deed of gift awards her a country mansion, unto which the remaining members of the family finally resort. After a lengthy residence in the new abode, the hero appears in the form of one Miles Chesilton, and 'Bab' is induced to unite her future with his, and the book closes with the prospective strains of the 'Wedding March.' Such in brief outline are the chief features of this convincing story, that will add to the deserved reputation of this writer of healthy and bright fiction.

REPRINTS AND NEW EDITIONS.—We have received from Mr. Edward Arnold the eleventh edition of that interesting and instructive work, 'England in Egypt,' by Viscount Milner, G.C.B. This edition has been brought up to date by a chapter on 'Egypt in 1904,' by Sir Eldon Gorst.—All readers who have an intelligent interest in the growth of history of their mother tongue will take advantage of the opportunity offered them by Messrs. George Routledge & Sons, Ltd., of purchasing at a cheap price Archbishop Trench's admirable 'Study of Words,' the copyright of the tenth edition of which has just expired.

PUBLICATIONS OF THE WEEK.

WITH AN INDEX OF AUTHORS, TITLES, AND SUBJECTS OF BOOKS IN ONE ALPHABET.

All books are in cloth when not otherwise described. When the word 'net' is printed against the price of a book it means that there is not the usual trade allowance. The words of the Index which are printed in italics refer to the name under which the title of a work appears in larger type. Publishers who observe the omission of a book from the list will confer a favour by sending a copy of the title to the office for insertion in the next number.

THE BOOK MONTHLY

AN ILLUSTRATED RECORD, GUIDE AND MAGAZINE FOR BOOKSELLERS, LIBRARIANS & PUBLISHERS FOR BOOKBUYERS, READERS & WRITERS

Most publications are content to 'go slow' in August, when the weather is warm and nothing is supposed to be doing. By way of varying this, the August BOOK MONTHLY seeks to be especially attractive and readable. A simple list of its contents is the witness to that:

PERSONAL AND PARTICULAR.—Good Literary Gossip, with a Letter from Sir Henry Irving, and Illustrations.

SILENT NO MORE.—Being Four New Poems by Mr. Gerald Massey.

A LOST CARLYLE ESSAY.—A Fragment of Literature on a Little Indian Meal.

BODLEY AT HOME.—His Daily Round, His Common Task at Oxford—W. H. Chesson.

'R. L. S.' IN THE PACIFIC.—A Budget of New Memories from Far Islands of the South.

LIGHT AND LEADING.—New Fact and Current Opinion Gathered from the Book World.

NEW BOOKS NEARLY READY.—Particulars of Interesting Volumes Likely to be Published this Month.

BOOKS OF THE MONTH.—A Classified Catalogue of the Noteworthy Books, New Editions, and Reprints of July.

It has been claimed as an honour of the book trade, that Sir Henry Irving was connected with it in his early days. Here is a letter on the matter from himself.

We have been lamenting the silence, for twenty years and more, of that true-born poet, Mr. Gerald Massey. Here are four new poems by him.

An essay by Thomas Carlyle, which seems, until now, to have lain hidden away in the pages of the magazine to which it was contributed half a century ago—that is interesting! Here it is.

So there are extra-ordinary reasons for getting the August BOOK MONTHLY, one being the greater leisure for reading which the month brings. It costs Sixpence net, and is published by Simpkin, Marshall, Hamilton, Kent & Co., Stationers' Hall Court, London.

'The editions are a miracle of elegance and compactness.'—WESTMINSTER GAZETTE.

REGULATIONS.

1. BOOKS IN PRINT ARE NOT ADVERTISED FOR, but can only appear in the ordinary Column advertisements and at the usual scale rate. Every care is taken to prevent this rule from being infringed; but we cannot hold ourselves in any way responsible for occasional oversights. Subscribers are requested to make careful inquiry at the Publishers' before sending their lists for these Columns.
2. Collective advertisements are not admissible, except in the case of very old subjects, where it may naturally be supposed the Advertisers have a difficulty in obtaining the titles.
3. All lists should be sent to the Office, addressed to the 'Manager of the Publishers' Circular,' as early in the week as possible, and in no case later than Wednesday morning. Advertisements received too late for one issue (i.e., on Thursday) are not inserted in the next unless express instructions to this effect are given. This is to avoid any misunderstanding arising from charging for extra lines.
4. Every Annual Subscriber has the privilege of an Advertisement of four titles free each week in these columns, and can have extra titles at 3d. per title prepaid. For Non-Subscribers a uniform rate of 3d. per title prepaid is charged, the name and address being counted as one title.
5. The Proprietors reserve to themselves the right of refusing any Advertisement.

TISSOT'S OLD TESTAMENT.

IN TWO VOLUMES.

Large 4to. cloth extra, £6 6s. net.

NOTE.—Following on the extraordinary success obtained by the publication of 'THE LIFE OF OUR LORD JESUS CHRIST,' M. Tissot desired, as the crowning work of his life, to add to the 'New Testament' Illustrations a series on the 'Old Testament,' and in this manner to supply illustrations which cover the whole period of the Bible history. This work, of surpassing interest to all students of the Bible story, contains nearly Four Hundred illustrations from M. J. James Tissot's original drawings. A large proportion of these are faithful reproductions in colour from the original drawings. The letterpress is in English only.

'M. Tissot's scheme of colour, with its bright, barbarous touches in raiment and furniture, is no less telling than the accomplishment of his drawing.'—Scotsman.

'There are few men of modern times who have so well depicted the deep and solemn purport of the Bible story.'—Pall Mall Gazette.

READY IN A FEW DAYS.

LITANIES OF LIFE

By KATHLEEN WATSON.

Third Edition. Crown 8vo. cloth, extra gilt top, price 2*s.* 6*d.* net.

'"Litanies of Life," by Kathleen Watson, is a little book containing five short stories, but every one of them is worth reading, and the note of all sounds sweet and true. The reader will lay down the book, as I did, with a feeling of profound sympathy and gratitude to the writer, in whose pages they can hear the tremulous throb of an intense emotion, which, however, does not obscure the finer and stronger note of heroic resolve.'—W. T. Stead.

NEW AND REVISED EDITION. READY IN A FEW DAYS.

THREE LITTLE GARDENERS

By AGNES J. TALBOT. Twenty-six Illustrations by Miss GERTRUDE M. BRADLEY.

A Diary of twelve months' work in a child's garden. A delightful little book of fun, frolic, and work by busy little hands and active brains. Coloured frontispiece. Square 8vo. cloth gilt, price 2*s.* 6*d.* net.

SIX-SHILLING NOVELS.

Crown 8vo. cloth gilt.

THE LADY NAVIGATORS. By Edward Noble, Author of 'The Edge of Circumstance.' [Ready early in September.

Mr. Noble's work has been compared by the critics with that of Rudyard Kipling and Joseph Conrad. His new book is another story of the sea, displaying a delightfully humorous element that should win the author many new admirers.

THE BENEFACTOR. By Ford Madox Hueffer. [Early in September.

An admirable piece of character drawing. The literary quality of the style is that of a true artist, and the story is interesting from the first page to the last. We confidently anticipate that this will prove one of the most widely read novels of the year.

LIEUTENANT GULLIVER JONES. By Edwin Lester Arnold. [Early in September.

The author of 'Phra, the Phœnician' gives us here the adventures of a resourceful American sailor in the planet Mars. Although Mr. Arnold's Martians have little in common with the weird creations of Mr. H. G. Wells, his book holds the reader from start to finish, and has the advantage of possessing a strong love interest.

OTHER NEW BOOKS.

REFLECTIONS OF A HOUSEHOLDER. By E. H. Lacon Watson, Author of 'The Making of a Man,' 'The Templars,' &c. [Ready early in September.

In this book of light sketches Mr. Lacon Watson returns to the vein of 'Benedictine' and 'An Attic in Bohemia.' The little essays which make up this amusing volume deal, in Mr. Watson's delicately humorous fashion, with a wide variety of subjects, ranging from domestic pets to the difficulties of a married book-lover.

8vo. cloth gilt, price 10*s.* 6*d.* With many Illustrations specially drawn for the Author.

SUN, WIND, AND DREAM. By Mona Caird. [Early in September.

This is something more than a guide-book, admirably as it would serve in this capacity for anyone who wished to travel in the footsteps of Mrs. Mona Caird. The spirit of Provence pervades the whole book, and the author is evidently in love with the beautiful country of which she writes so well.

8vo. cloth gilt.

HERE AND THERE. By H. G. Keene, C.I.E., Author of 'A Servant of John Company' &c. &c. [Early in October.

Mr. Keene is one of the few survivors of the old régime in India. In this fascinating book of reminiscences he gives us stories of old Haileybury, and of Indian life in days before the Mutiny, while in the later part of the volume he brings his recollections down to the literary London of quite modern times. There is hardly a name of importance in the history of India or of literature during the last eighty years that does not figure in Mr. Keene's pages.

THE NEXT INTERNATIONAL CONGRESS OF PUBLISHERS.

UNQUESTIONABLY our German friends take the greatest interest in International Congresses; it is impossible to take up a German paper without finding some reference to some International Congress of some kind or other; only the other day the German fishing papers had long reports of the International Fisheries Congress at Vienna. One special correspondent said that after attending all the lectures and conferences he was obliged to come to the conclusion that the main object the members who attended had in view in doing so was to hear themselves talk—not that they had any new ideas to impart—and that the result was voces et prœterea nihil. Without denying that there may be a grain of truth in this Berlin correspondent's cynical remarks in connection with these international palavers, it was decidedly amusing to find that he had a personal grievance which rather weakened his general condemnation. It seems that he too had gone prepared to deliver an address, that he had been put down for one of the last sittings, and then, after having had to listen to everybody's verbosity, the President had informed him it was too late to have his address, but that it might be included in the official reports. No wonder he asks, 'After all, what practical good are these International Congresses?' Whether they are any practical good or not, there is nothing our German friends love so much as to meet together and have a jolly good confabulation. It was always the same. Was it Cæsar, or some other Roman General, who said that if the German tribes had spent more time in fighting and less in talking he would never have beaten them?

BUSINESS PROGRAMME OF THE MILAN CONGRESS.

It is to this German love of congressing that we owe the earliest particulars respecting the Milan Congress. From a circular dated 'Leipzig, middle of July, 1905,' signed by an International Committee appointed to make arrangements for the participation of Germany, Austria, and Switzerland at the International Congress of Publishers at Milan next year, we learn that membership of the Congress is confined to book publishers, music publishers, art publishers, and publishers of periodicals (reviews, magazines, illustrated papers) of all countries. The membership fee is twenty francs.

Discussions can be in Italian, French, German, and English. Interpreters for these languages will be present at all the sittings.

The Congress sittings will take place in Milan, from June 6 to 10, 1906.

Subjects dealt with will relate exclusively to such questions as have international interest, and refer either to authors' rights or publishers' rights in works of literature and art, or relate to book, art, music, or periodical publication.

The Congress is divided into two sections—

Section A: Authors' Rights and Publishers' Rights.

Section B: Book, Art, Music, and Periodical Trade.

The discussions will be arranged in three sub-sections of the sections A and B, formed as follows:

1. Books and periodicals.
2. Music.
3. Objects of the trade in works of art (engravings, prints, photographs).

Reports or papers for the Congress will be published in French; the motions (vœux) in connection with the papers in Italian, French, German, and English. For discussion and resolution in the General Assembly only such questions can be admitted as have been dealt with in one of the sub-sections and referred by it to the General Assembly. The Committee which has charge of the German, Swiss, and Austrian arrangements at the Congress is composed of the following gentlemen: Herr Arthur Meiner, President; Dr. Erich Ehlermann, Vice-President; Herr Ferdinand Lomnitz, Secretary; Herr Arthur Sellier, Vice-Secretary; and in sending particulars of the 'Order of Business' of the Congress to those likely to be interested they ask that any questions relating to the Congress may be referred to them at the office of the Deutschen Verlegervereins (German Publishers' Association), Leipzig (7 Gutenbergstrasse).

The Committee ask that all who propose to contribute papers to the Congress should send them particulars of same before November 30, 1905.

The papers or reports must deal with new questions of international importance which have not already been presented to former congresses and dealt with by them.

The papers must be in the French language for the Congress, and the Committee undertake to provide translations of those sent to them in German; they ask for an early intimation from those who intend to take part in the Congress, as it is only to those they will send further communications respecting it. The German, Austrian, and Swiss members of the Leipzig International Congress numbered 234; the presence of many eminent publishers from those countries gave great éclat to the affair, and the Committee hope that they will also be very strongly represented at Milan next June.

Nobody should, if they can help it, die before visiting Italy, and such an excellent excuse as the Congress will afford should ensure a large and representative attendance of British, Irish, and American publishers.

Doubtless the Publishers' Association of the United Kingdom will presently follow the example of their German confrères and appoint a committee to supply information and make arrangements similar to those referred to above—if Mr. Fairholm's services could be secured again it would certainly be most advantageous. The Congress will be a great social success, a charming affair, for no nation can surpass the Italians in gracious hospitality, but what we tremble for is the business side of it. If the papers are to be restricted to new questions of international interest such as have not already been dealt with at previous Congresses where are they to come from, and it seems like a reflection on those voluminous Official Reports of the Leipzig, Paris, and London Congresses to suppose they do not cover all imaginable subjects. Care must be exercised in dealing with questions of bindings and paper—Russia, Japan, and Morocco, and even Persia, are far more delicate international subjects at present than when the world's chief publishers last met in Congress.

NOTES AND ANNOUNCEMENTS.

Messrs. Methuen are about to issue 'The Lady of Lyte,' a new novel by Graham Hope. The story is concerned with the love affairs of Mistress Kathleen Clifford, Lady of the Manor of Lyte, and the adventures of her guardians—one of whom is a Jesuit priest—during the Popish Plot, 1678.

A work on 'Criminal Responsibility' will shortly be issued from the Oxford University Press. The author is Dr. Charles Mercier, a well-known authority on insanity, and the book is intended to complement that by Sir FitzJames Stephen. Dr. Mercier points out that the question of criminal responsibility should be considered anew by a professional psychologist—Sir FitzJames Stephen was handicapped by insufficient knowledge of the work of the mind in health and disease—and that in twenty years our knowledge of insanity has advanced. Dr. Mercier's work is the result of long study spread over many years.

'The Publishers' Circular asks the question : Who invented the trouser crease which figures so prominently in English and American illustrations? and as this query is of decided interest, in view of its worldwide application, it may be as well for us to give the history of the same. Some twenty odd years ago a trouser stretcher was introduced as a cure for baggy knees, and this was, in a measure, successful. It did not, however, impart a crease down the front, as no pressure was brought to bear between the top and the bottom, the sole aim being to stretch them. A West End tailor then invented a stretcher and presser, which he patented, and it had a remarkable sale. The many ways of producing pressure enabled others to make pressers without infringing his patent, so that soon the market became flooded with pressers of all kinds, and it is to the introduction of these we owe the trouser crease.'—Tailor and Cutter.

In their popular Shilling Series of Novels Messrs. Methuen announce the publication of 'The Baptist Ring,' by Weatherby Chesney, and 'The Black Wolf's Breed,' by Harris Dickson.

Would Mr. J. S. Ferrier, of Messrs. Oliphant, Anderson & Ferrier, when he returns from Canada, kindly enlighten us on the object of the heavy tax on commercial travellers which is now imposed by the benighted Province of Quebec, as will be seen from an article on another page?

The story of perhaps the most remarkable case of kidnapping of which we have any record is contained in Mr. Marsh's new novel. 'The Marquis of Putney,' who gives his name to the book, was stolen from his perambulator in Hyde Park while an infant in arms. The solution of the mystery as to his whereabouts is very dramatic. Messrs. Methuen have the book ready.

The next volumes in the 'Oxford Poets' series will be a large-type Shakespeare, one edition of which will contain thirty-one illustrations taken from the Boydell Gallery ; and Shelley's complete poetical works, edited by Mr. T. Hutchinson. Both the Shakespeare (which will be complete in one volume) and the Shelley will be printed on ordinary and on Oxford India paper.

AUTUMN
EDUCATIONAL NUMBER

This will be published next week. Those Publishers who have not yet sent in their Lists should do so without delay, addressed to the Editor.

Mr. John Long will publish at once an important work entitled 'Glimpses of the Ages, or the "Superior" and "Inferior" Races, so-called, Discussed in the Light of Science and History,' by Theophilus E. Samuel Scholes, M.D., &c. In this work the aim of the author has been to show that in the three great divisions of mankind there exists an absolute equality. The kinds of equality considered are physical and mental. The volume deals exhaustively with the much-discussed question of the equality of the coloured races with that of the white, and the author introduces much information to prove that the so-called 'superiority' of the whites over the coloured races is an untenable theory.

Messrs. Methuen will publish an edition of Alexandre Dumas's 'Cécile,' with coloured illustrations. These pictures are from drawings by Mr. D. Murray Smith, and have been carefully reproduced and printed.

The Daily News, referring to our query as to whether it is not a mistake for literary papers to give lists of 'The Best Selling Books' week by week, as it seems to us to be unfairly handicapping the books which are best for worthier reasons, says : 'If the principle implied in this remark were fully carried out it would obviously be the duty of literary papers to devote most of their space to learned and recondite works. If a new popular novel and a large work on palæontology were allotted columns according to their respective merits, the popular novel might suffer. On the other hand, more readers are interested in popular novels than in palæontology, and even literary papers have to consider their readers. On the other hand, there is a real force in the objection to advertising regularly the "Best Selling Books." To do so is to give news ; but it may also mean the suppression of news — for instance, as to the books of real merit which have not sold, or the trivial accidents which are often responsible for the success of a book. Nor is it asking too much of a professedly literary paper to expect that it should aim at furthering the success of good books, and that it should wish bad books to fail. We are not anxious to see a literary paper "with a purpose" ; but we do expect it to put the art of criticism before the art of bookselling.' It seems to us that the Daily News endorses our view. We had chiefly in mind the fact that a few 'big sellers' were boomed at the expense of better books, including novels.

A new volume of the 'Mediæval Towns' series will be 'Edinburgh,' by Mr. Oliphant Smeaton. The illustrations are by Mr. Herbert Railton and Mr. J. Ayton Symington, and there are several reproductions of historical portraits.

Special interest is being taken just now in the way in which motor cars can be utilised for industrial purposes. From July 28 to August 3 some very important trials took place in the North of France. These will be specially illustrated and described in Motor Traction for the 10th inst., published by Messrs. Iliffe & Sons, Ltd., of 20 Tudor Street.

H.R.H. the Princess of Wales has been graciously pleased to accept a copy of 'Castles in Sand : How to Build Them,' by W. Poynter Adams, published by Messrs. Gay & Bird.

First we had the Strenuous Life, then came the Simple Life, now we have the Equitable Life.—Life.

PROSPERITY OF SPAIN.

The present increased and increasing prosperity of Spain is one of the most interesting subjects of economic study. She has lost what was once the principal source of her wealth—her colonies in Asia and America, territories transcending in area and productivity any dominion ever included in a single kingdom. But she learned what it was to be 'land poor' and to be overweighted with responsibilities which she could not carry. She has now turned to the exploitation of her own soil and her native industries; she is cultivating a mercantile marine, and the result is a rapid rise to prosperity, so that by J. Hogge Fort and F. V. Dwelshauvers, in 'España Moderna' (Madrid), she is hailed as 'New Spain.'

These authors describe, under various heads, the rise of Spanish prosperity, and support their assertions by the citation of figures of the revenue and the value abroad of Spanish Government bonds.

By 1898 Spanish bonds had sunk to 34. In 1903 they were slated at 90. For the financial depression of Spain was the very cause of her rise to a condition of solvency. To quote further:

'It was at the precise moment when Spain found herself in the most difficult situation—namely, between 1895 and 1898—that she felt those keen incentives which contributed most of all to her patriotic and energetic efforts. It is no secret that her industrial and commercial revival seemed to start out from the financial ruin in which she was involved—a ruin which had produced a condition absolutely unprecedented in the economic history of the country.'

The country was compelled to develop its own natural resources.—Literary Digest.

DEATH OF MR. HENRY SOTHERAN.

With much regret I have to record the death of Mr. Henry Sotheran, whose portrait, with some account of his career, we hope to give next week. Henry Sotheran, as I first remember him, was an extremely active young man, alert and full of genial vitality. It does not seem to me to be very long ago that he once introduced me to his venerable father, and yet it must have been more than fifty years since; it was before he retired from the business which he carried on in Great Tower Street. I have some dim recollection of once meeting both father and son at a banquet presided over by the late John Dickenson, Esq., at which Charles Dickens was the principal guest and speaker. This was in the sixties. I forget exact time or place—probably it was at the 'Albion,' Aldersgate Street, the great resort of publishers for their sale dinners during a large portion of the nineteenth century. At these dinners Mr. Sotheran was always a prominent character. My business intercourse with him has been continuous, and always of the most genial and cordial character. He was one of those men who was an honour to the bookselling profession in his generation, and his memory should be cherished and kept green. He died in his eighty-sixth year. E. M.

THE LATE MR. REGINALD BARNICOTT.

Mr. Reginald Barnicott, whose decease we recorded in our last issue, was the sixth and third surviving son of the late James Barnicott, who established what is now well known as the Athenæum Press at Taunton. He was born on October 5, 1844. He was educated at Queen's College, Taunton, where he distinguished himself as an athlete; and, indeed, it is to be noted that his vigorous physical powers never flagged nor failed till the development of that fatal malady which finally carried him off. He married, in 1871, Amelia Allen, daughter of the Rev. N. P. Slater, the then Governor of Queen's College. On the death of his father in 1876 he succeeded to the direction of the business, which has, under his management, achieved an honourable name in the English book world. He was essentially a man of artistic temperament, and by his close attention to the minutest details of technique, no less than by the cultured taste which he brought to bear on every part of the work, he maintained and enhanced the ancient fame of Taunton as a printing centre. The heads of the leading publishing houses have borne testimony to the perfection of the work of the Athenæum Press; and lovers of books have long recognised in Mr. Barnicott a master-printer who has carried on the fine traditions of earlier days, a lineal descendant of the Aldi, the Elzevirs, the Baskervilles, in that he looked upon printing not simply as a business, but loved it as an art.

THE LATE MR. R. BARNICOTT OF TAUNTON.

He was an enthusiastic and gifted musician, a musical critic of no mean order, and a composer of numerous tunes and not a few hymns of high merit. His chief interest in this direction lay in the study of Old English music, and he was known to possess a very valuable collection of Old English part-songs and madrigals.

He not only served his native town in various public capacities, but was keenly interested in the historical and literary associations of Taunton. He was a member of the Somerset Archæological Society for over thirty years; he was also one of the chief promoters of the Taunton Field Club, and has taken an active part in rescuing from oblivion the folk-songs of the county. He had made a considerable collection of books and pamphlets relating to the history of Taunton and the neighbourhood, as well as a collection of local topographical views. He had also from time to time contributed from the wealth of his special knowledge to the common good, as, for example, in 'Taunton of To-day,' a work published in 1895. He had often been asked to tell the story of the Taunton printers, for which he had for years been collecting rich, we may say ample, material. He frequently said that he looked forward to doing it some day, when the calm eventide of life should bring leisure. But that chapter of Taunton's history may not now be written, for few men indeed are left who could write it as he would have done, with the enthusiasm of a son of the ancient borough and with the accuracy of a perfect master of his subject. Although his ill-health prevented him from taking any active part in the affairs of the Booksellers' Association, of which his partner, Mr. Edwin Pearce, is the greatly respected hon. secretary, he was an ardent supporter of it and the net system. Mr. Pearce will indeed miss the words of encouragement of his partner and close friend for over thirty years.

£2,850 FOR SHAKESPEARE QUARTOS.

LITERARY TREASURES LEAVING OUR SHORES.

Messrs. Sotheby brought their season to a dramatic conclusion on Saturday, July 29, with the sale of five Shakespeare quartos, the property of Mr. George Carrington, of Great Missenden, for which £2,850 was received.

The first quarto offered was a fine copy of 'the Most Excellent Historie of the Merchant of Venice,' published in 1652. Mr. Jackson, who a few weeks ago acquired for an American collector a fourth quarto of Shakespeare's 'King Richard the Third' for the record price of £1,750, soon made his presence felt, and for £200 acquired the little volume.

The next, the 1608 edition of 'Richard the Third,' was secured by Mr. Jackson for £250; and then the rarest of the five, 'the Historie of Henry the Fourth,' 1608, was offered. The bidding opened at £100, but at £300 Mr. Jackson entered the fray, and the price rapidly mounted up to £1,000, at which price he secured the treasure.

For £500 Mr. Jackson also acquired the second part of 'King Henry the Fourth,' which was made additionally valuable owing to the fact that it bore the autograph of William Penn.

The last of the five, the 'Life and Death of King Lear,' 1608, was purchased by a private buyer, a Mr. Stephens, for £900, the opening bid of £100 being increased by him to £560 in one bid.

At the Dent sale in 1827 a copy of the last-mentioned went for £14 5*s*., and at the Steevens sale a hundred years ago a copy of 'Henry the Fourth,' which on Saturday made £1,000, realised no more than twenty-seven shillings.

Copies of all of these plays are in the British Museum, and a few great private libraries contain examples; but English collectors must look to it if they do not wish to see England lose all those that can possibly reach the sale room, for the supply is limited and American collectors seem to place no restriction upon those whom they commission to acquire these rare works for them—Daily Mail.

THE ELECTRIC TRAIN DISASTER.

The recent terrible railway accident has had a somewhat curious effect on the pocket-book-making industry. Charles Letts & Co., the Diary firm, since the accident have experienced a notably increased demand for their pocket-books and other specialities in which an insurance policy is inserted, and in consequence the output of their factory has been heavily taxed. Truly it is an ill wind that blows nobody any good.

Mr. Stanley Waugh, one of the victims of the disaster, was possessed of a £1,000 coupon contained in one of Charles Letts's note books. The General Accident Company, immediately on receipt of an intimation to this effect, wired admitting claim and promised despatch of a cheque on receipt of letters of administration.

DIE VERNON.

The supposed original of Diana Vernon in Sir Walter Scott's 'Rob Roy' is the subject of the first article in this month's Good Words. She was a Miss Jane Anne Cranstown, afterwards the wife of Count Wenceslaus, of Purgstall, and had an eventful and ultimately tragic life. She and her husband were intimate with Goethe, Schiller, Mozart, and all who were best worth knowing in Germany, but the public life of Austrians in Count Purgstall's position was harassing and full of bitter mortification during the evil Napoleonic years.

One child was born of the marriage, so frail that only the mother's passionate devotion kept him alive to the age of nineteen. The Countess, that he might speak 'the language of her heart,' had an Aberdeenshire nurse for him, and the brilliant conversation of the last descendant of the historic house of Purgstall was expressed in good Scottish speech! Death bereft the Countess of husband and son within a short interval of each other. Her friends were anxious that she should return to Scotland, but in her impulsive, romantic way, she had sworn to her son to lay her dust beside his, and in her devotion she believed that death would not too long delay. But she had not calculated on the vigorous constitution and indestructible vitality that she had inherited from her race, vitality which can reject no element of interest, no gladness nor sorrow up to the last of life.

WARNING TO BOOKSELLERS.

Messrs. Spencer & Greenhough, of Leicester, write:

'A man, whose description I enclose, is going about the country victimising booksellers, and if you could insert a warning in your valuable journal it may prevent others being defrauded, and perhaps be the means of bringing the offender to justice.

'His description and modus operandi is as follows: Doctor Gordon, alias Hamilton, Herbert, Wilkinson, Howard, Fortescue, Napier, &c. (he has just recently been to Maidstone victimising tradesmen and giving his name as "Captain Herbert"). Height 5 feet 9½ inches, complexion fresh, hair and pointed beard (turning grey) dark, eyes grey, scar on bottom lip, speaks with a strong Scotch accent, gentlemanly appearance, may be wearing a grey or blue jacket suit; calls on booksellers, states he is a doctor just retired from practice in another town, and is going to reside in the town, but is at present in temporary lodgings while his house is prepared for him; is going to present a professional gentleman with a book for services rendered; selects a valuable work, price about £10, arranges to have it sent to his lodgings, asks for the account, which he takes with him, and states he will call in a few days after getting his banking account transferred to a bank in the town where he is going to reside; and after obtaining several lots of books from different shops, absconds. Should he attempt to defraud any of your readers they might acquaint the local police and inform them he is wanted by the Leicester Borough Police for false pretences, and that they will fetch him if arrested.'

THE BRET HARTE ASSISTANCE FUND.

Committee:

Mr. George Meredith, O.M.
Sir George Newnes, Bart., M.P.
Sir Francis C. Burnand.
Dr. Robertson Nicoll.
Sir Gilbert Parker, M.P.
Sir Arthur Conan Doyle.
Mr. Hall Caine.
Mr. George R. Sims.
Mr. Clement K. Shorter.
Mr. H. Beerbohm Tree.
Mr. Anthony Hope Hawkins.

Mr. Bret Harte, the famous novelist, whose works have given so much enjoyment in all English-speaking lands, died in poor circumstances, leaving his daughter Ethel totally unprovided for. Miss Bret Harte finds the struggle for a livelihood very hard. Her health has broken down at a time when she has been striving to earn her living on the concert platform and the stage. It is thought that many in Great Britain and the United States who knew her father personally or who loved his books would be disposed to contribute a small sum [amounts of even 5*s*. would be exceedingly acceptable], in order that a fund may be raised which may permanently benefit Miss Ethel Bret Harte. The gentlemen named above have given their names to the committee as a guarantee of the genuineness of this appeal.

Subscriptions may be sent to the Honorary Secretary to the Fund, Dr. L. C. Alexander, of Holly Lodge, Upper Parkfields, Putney, S.W., or to the London and County Bank, Putney Branch.

LADY PUBLISHER.

Mrs. Grant Richards has established a publishing business, of which her husband is the manager.

The new business will be carried on at 7 Carlton Street, Regent Street, and its first production will be a series of editions of the classics.

JUDGE RAY GOES AGAINST THE AMERICAN PUBLISHERS' ASSOCIATION.

We regret to see that Judge Ray, in the United States Circuit Court, has dismissed the action of Messrs. Charles Scribner & Sons and the Bobbs-Merrill Company against Messrs. R. H. Macy & Co., for an injunction to restrain the Macys from selling copyright books at less than the retail prices fixed by the American Publishers' Association.

Judge Ray said: 'When all publishers of, and dealers in, copyright books—and nearly all new books are now copyrighted—combine to exact a fixed arbitrary price, &c., the readers of books become powerless, if they would read at all, not because of the monopoly granted or sanctioned by the Government in granting the copyright, but because of the new monopoly (the conspiracy of monopolists) created by the agreement and combination of these monopolists; one that is forbidden and denounced by the Act of July 2, 1890.'

Judge Ray further says that, if the Northern Securities and kindred cases 'are to be respected as law and followed in cases where there is no hue and cry against railroads, this combination is illegal and in restraint of interstate commerce.'

He wound up a long judgment as follows: 'The defendants have not infringed and are not threatening to infringe complainants' copyright, nor have they violated any contract. The complainant is seeking to enforce against defendants an unlawful combination agreement to which such defendants are not parties and by which they have not consented to be bound in selling books of which they are the absolute owners. The same result on a similar state of facts as to the effect of such notice was reached by the Court in Bobbs-Merrill Co. v. Snellenburg, 131 Fed. Rep. 530. The defendants are entitled to a decree dismissing the complaint with costs.'

The American Publishers' Weekly, in commenting on the decision, says that it thinks the circuit Judge is likely to be overruled on appeal, but admits the decision is a most important one. We assume from this that the Association will appeal, especially as it seems clear that the Judge was entirely mistaken on at least one point on which he based his decision. He said that one of the five purposes of the combination was to 'fix the retail price of books.' But, of course, the Association does not fix the retail price of books, that is always done by the copyright owner. What the Association does is to maintain the price whatever it may be fixed at and prevent underselling. If by 'fix the retail price' the Judge meant maintain the retail price, then, of course, he is right, as the Association does that. The result of the appeal is looked for with great interest in America.

THE OLDEST STAMP OF ALL.

The oldest and one of the most interesting stamps is one of 1840—the first ever issued. It was designed by the inventor of postage stamps, Sir Rowland Hill, a Member of Parliament, who naturally chose the head of Queen Victoria as the emblem. Oddly enough, the people objected to this, saying that it was a degradation of the Queen, 'To lick her back and smear her face.' The first issue was, therefore, quickly suppressed, and to take its place an envelope was printed upon which an elaborate symbol was engraved. This 'mulready envelope,' as it was called, soon became the object of ridicule, so that the small 'lickable' stamps were reverted to, and the prejudice against the use of the Queen's head soon disappeared, although for a long time postage stamps were more or less satirised in verse and prose.

The United States followed suit very soon in the use of stamps, and Brazil was next in line, and before many years the whole world was thoroughly bestamped.—Geyer's Stationer.

LORD ROSEBERY ON CATALOGUING SECONDHAND BOOKS.

Writing to the editor of the Publishers' Weekly, Mr. Charles Welsh says:

'Sir,—Seven years ago I put forward in your columns a plea for a uniform system in cataloguing second-hand books—a plea which you very cordially upheld—contributing some valuable practical suggestions in a leading article dealing with the subject.

'But my feeble voice, even with your powerful backing, did not reach far, and, so far as I can see, there has been no concerted action taken in the direction indicated.

'Recently, however, a more powerful voice has been lifted in favour of the idea. At the meeting of the Associated Booksellers of Great Britain and Ireland, held in Edinburgh last month, Lord Rosebery, in the course of his reply to the toast of "Literature," said, among many other interesting things, "With regard to secondhand literature, much is to be done by grouping and guidance, and I believe that in that direction the future of book catalogues must take shape. In that way you are not merely vendors, but educators, and that after all is the proper function of the bookseller." But more than this—not only would it be a boon to the bookbuyer—it would pay the bookseller. With the A. L. A. catalogue class list before him the task of classification is easy, and if the sellers of second-hand books would all agree to follow this or some other system, time and money would be saved by everybody concerned.—Yours truly,

'Charles Welsh.'

'Winthrop, Mass.: July 6, 1905.'

[We fear that the difficulty and expense of properly classifying a large miscellaneous stock are much greater than Mr. Welsh supposes.—Ed. P.C.]

HIGH PRICES FOR RUBBISH.

The habit of attending art sales (says the Burlington Magazine) has become a society craze, and the wealthiest people in England are to be found in the rooms for the two or three days upon which the things are on view. Naturally many objects attract their attention, and they give a commission or two before they leave the sale room. Now, unfortunately, wealth and artistic perception do not necessarily go hand in hand, and these people are seldom found to possess either judgment or idea of value. The result is that grotesquely extravagant prices have frequently been obtained for rubbish. The fact is all the harder for the dealer to bear since he is conscious that he has far finer things at home that he would often be only too pleased to sell at one quarter of the figure realised for similar specimens in the auction room. Then, again, when a person purchases anything from a dealer he expects a guarantee—unreasonable as it often is on the face of it—and gets it. If some indiscreet friend of the buyer, or some rival of the seller, declares the object other than what it was sold for, the dealer is compelled to rescind the sale, or risk creating a situation which may materially damage his reputation. When a thing is purchased under the hammer the auctioneer effectually safeguards himself against any contingency by selling with all faults and errors of description, and making no warrant whatsoever. Thus he has in a large measure usurped the place of the dealer while ridding himself of the latter's responsibilities.

PAINTINGS IN TEMPERA.

Among the delightful exhibitions held during the season at the cosy little Carfax Gallery in Bury Street, St. James', none has surpassed in interest that given recently by the Society of Painters in Tempera—the first regular exhibition of the work of the members. As our readers, doubtless, are aware, this is an old art revived, long antedating painting in oil. The medium employed is simply the yolk of egg, which gives body to the colours without affecting their purity; but its chief merit lies in its brilliancy and permanence. Still, it was not through mere caprice that tempera was supplanted by oil painting; for the latter not only affords facilities for greater depth in shadows and subtlety of tone gradation, but it allows of much greater freedom in execution. With oil colours you may paint and repaint the same passage as often as you please, but you could not mess about in this way with tempera colours without the most disastrous results. The egg medium is in painting almost as exacting as silver point is in drawing, and that the members of this Society should have made such a creditable showing on the occasion of their first concerted effort is very promising. A few of the members, to be sure, like Walter Crane, Anning Bell, and Sir Charles Holroyd, are accomplished artists who are bound to be interesting, no matter what medium they may employ. The decorative qualities of 'The Deep Midnight,' an impressive group of two seated figures by F. Cayley Robinson, leads us to hope that that strong and imaginative artist may some day be given the opportunity to show what he could do in mural painting, to which genre his art would seem to be particularly suited.

The Early Italian feeling that pleasantly characterised the exhibition, in sympathy with the old-fashioned medium employed, extended in many cases to the frames, which were carved and gilded for the pictures, and in this connection we must mention the names of Miss Mary Morris, Mrs. Batten, Miss Ridley, and Miss Winifred Boielle.—Arts and Crafts.

A FRENCH CANADIAN BIBLIOGRAPHY.

Mr. Raoul Rehault, Bookseller, Quebec, sends us a copy of a French Canadian Bibliography entitled: 'Inventaire Chronologique des Livres, Brochures, Journaux et Revues publiés dans la langue française en la province de Québec depuis l'établissement de l'imprimerie, en 1764, jusqu'à l'année 1905.' (Chronological Inventory of the Books, Pamphlets, Newspapers, and Magazines published in the French language in the Province of Quebec since the establishment of printing, in 1764, to 1905) By N. E. Dionne, LL.D., Member of the Royal Society of Canada, Librarian of the Legislative Library of the Province of Quebec, and author of several authoritative historical works.

This Bibliography of the French-Canadian Press is divided in two parts: Part I., Books and Pamphlets, 3,200 numbers; Part II., Newspapers and Magazines, 800 numbers. It is replete with notes and summaries of the most important items, and has a long Introduction on the history and development of printing in the Province, from 1764 to date, and some biographical notes on the most popular French-Canadian writers.

We need not insist on the value and importance of such a reference work to the librarian, historian, bibliographer, collector, and even to the bookseller, on account of its copious bibliographical, biographical, and historical data.

It is the first work of the kind ever published in Canada, and should be found on the shelves of every important library. The issue is limited to 300 numbered copies, signed by the author, and as the orders will be filled in rotation those who desire to secure one or more copies should apply to the appointed agent of the author, Mr. Raoul Renault, Quebec, Canada.

Mention the 'P. C.'—Our Readers who order books, &c. they see mentioned or advertised in the Publishers' Circular will do us a great service if they will mention the fact to the Publishers and Wholesale Agents.

The price is $4 (16*s.* 6*d.* net).

SHAKESPEARE, BEN JONSON, AND PLINY.

To THE EDITOR OF 'THE NATION.'

SIR,—Your excerpts from Professor Sonnenschein's article, in your issue of June 29, with accompanying comment, will have added interest if you permit me to direct attention to a brief anonymous contribution in Baconiana for January 1904, which until now has been quite ignored. Therein it is shown that the brief Epistle Dedicatory of the First Folio, signed by Heminge and Condell, is a close paraphrase of the Preface to Pliny's Natural History! Of the nine parallel passages there adduced, the eighth is as characteristic as any:

From the First Folio.	From Bohn's Translation (1855).
Country hands reach foorth milke, creame, fruites, or what they have: and many Nations (we have heard) that had not gummes & incense, obtained their requests with a leavened cake. It was no fault to approach their Gods by what meanes they could.	But the country people, and, indeed, some whole nations, offer milk to the Gods, and those who cannot procure frankincense substitute in its place salted cakes, for the Gods are not dissatisfied when they are worshipped by every one to the best of his ability.

It is important to add that while there was an English translation of Pliny extant as early as 1601, absolutely no resemblance can be detected between this and the Heminge and Condell Dedication. It remained for the translation in Bohn's Library edition (1855) to disclose the remarkable resemblance. Malone long ago suspected that this dedication was really the work of Ben Jonson, and some few critics have agreed with him.

Baconiana not being easily accessible to American readers, it may be stated that there is a bound file at the Astor Library, shelf-mark 544 C. CHAS. A. HERPICH.

THE PLAINT OF THE UNHAPPY BOOKSELLER.

THE accusations levelled by some of the bishops against the commercial morality of the country is discussed by various correspondents in the Daily Mail:

THE UNHAPPY BOOKSELLER.

To the Editor of the Daily Mail.

SIR,—'There's cheating in every trade but ours' may in truth be said by the unhappy bookseller; if any cheating, indeed, at all it is decidedly upon the other side, and the unfortunate bookseller is cheated out of his hard-earned profits by monopolising traders and an exacting public. The cry is Discount! Discount! Discount! First it was 2*d.* in the shilling, then 3*d.*, and now wealthy companies, school boards, and the public demand 30, 33, and 35 per cent.! leaving the poor bookseller absolutely profitless, and frequently a considerable loser.

Bookselling was once looked upon as a business of the first rank, and even as a profession, and was followed by gentlemen of position and education. Now, any sensible parent would rather apprentice his son to a butcher or chimney-sweep than make him a bookseller. Yet it has been proved that the bookseller—the personal bookseller—is the most powerful influence in the introduction and propagation of literature.

If something is not done to check this state of things the author of the future will get no intelligent person to sell his works.

A principle is involved. Literature is in jeopardy—the nation's greatest bulwark. A 'combine' among publishers and booksellers is imperative in order to protect a business of the highest importance to the nation and the world against total wreckage at the hands of a merciless public and unscrupulous traders.

There is no branch of the world's commerce so essential to its prosperity and advancement, and no business which demands so much keen judgment, intelligence, acumen, and ability, as that of the bookseller. Combination, speedy and firm combination, against unjust oppression and total ruin is the only remedy.

QUEBEC'S TAX ON COMMERCIAL TRAVELLERS.

MUCH misunderstanding and unfavourable comment is resulting from the recently adopted law assessing travellers of foreign houses doing business in the Province of Quebec the sum of $300 annually. A large number of Canadian manufacturers and wholesalers are, according to Mr. J. F. Stewart, of the Manufacturers' Association, still under the impression that the tax applies to them. A strict reading of the wording of the Act would consider residents of other provinces in Canada to be foreigners in Quebec, but the Quebec law-makers are not interpreting the Act so closely, and Canadians are, therefore, not liable to the tax as it is being at present enforced. In this respect, Quebec is more friendly to her sister provinces than British Columbia, whose tax of $50 semi-annually is imposed on Canadians as well as 'foreigners.'

In the United States the impression also seems to be held by many that the new law is a piece of Dominion legislation. An item emanating from the Boston News Bureau, headed 'Canada's New Business Tax,' is being copied extensively throughout the east. It reads as follows:

'Boston commercial travellers en route from Toronto to Montreal were surprised to learn that if they went farther east they would be subject to a new tax of $300 as representatives of commercial houses having no place of business in Canada.

'The law is in force and the penalty is very severe; ranging from $500 to $1,000. The Boston men immediately returned home after notifying their customers in the Province of Quebec that they must send their orders direct to the home office or arrange a meeting at Toronto or elsewhere in Ontario.'

The feeling of American commercial men on the subject can be judged by an extract from a letter sent by a large association of manufacturers in the United States to the Canadian Manufacturers' Association, as follows:

'This would appear to be a matter for Dominion legislation, and not for that of a province, seeing that it is to some extent an interference with international trade. It is conceivable that if it is constitutionally correct for one province to pass legislation of this kind, others could do the same, and might perhaps place the license at so high a figure as to absolutely prevent any traveller from Europe or the States soliciting business in Canada, if that should be the object.'

Little has been heard from Great Britain as yet, but it is certain that the commercial press there will strongly condemn Quebec's action as tending to destroy Imperialistic sentiment and as being altogether out of harmony with the friendly commercial feeling between Canada and the Mother Country, which has been developed during the past few years.—Canadian Bookseller and Stationer.

[There ought to be a meeting of the commercial press, and a big prize offered for the strongest language in which to protest against this unchristian and ungrateful conduct on the part of the Province of Quebec. The travellers for our Bible warehouses and educational and general publishers to be taxed from 500 to 1,000 dollars! General Wolfe would never have stormed the Heights of Abraham if he had thought our commercial travellers would be subjected to this Shylockian treatment.—ED. P.C.]

YOUR LETTER WENT ASTRAY.

BECAUSE you forgot to address it.

Because you forgot to stamp it.

Because you forgot to write the town or State on the envelope.

Because you didn't write the street and number plain.

Because you used a once-cancelled stamp.

Because you used internal revenue stamps instead of postage stamps.

Because you used a foreign stamp.

Because you wrote the address so badly that no one could read it.

Because you wrote the address on top of the envelope and it was obliterated by the post-office dating, receiving, and cancelling stamps.

Because you put your letter in a blank envelope and sealed it and forwarded it to the dead-letter office, where thousands upon thousands of valuable letters are daily destroyed because the people are either careless or ignorant of the postal laws.—Chicago Daily News.

[We should say it was because so many Americans forget to put sufficient postage on their letters to this country.—ED. P.C.]

TRADE NOTES AND CHANGES.

THE Library Press, of 9 Duke Street, Charing Cross, London, inform us that they have secured the exclusive services of Mr. W. Hurton, who will represent them in England, Scotland, and Ireland, with their popular series, the Cameo Classics, of which there will shortly be twelve volumes ready.

SKETCHES FROM THE DIARY OF A COMMERCIAL TRAVELLER OF THE MIDDLE OF LAST CENTURY.*

Introductory.

THE COMMERCIAL CHARACTER AND OCCUPATION.

THE completion of a term of three times seven years as a commercial traveller has this day brought me to a recollection of the commencement of my business career, under circumstances eminently auspicious. As a youth, serving my time to a manufacturer, who was called upon at intervals by a goodly number of commercial travellers, and who took alternately his journeys with a gentleman, our occasional representative, I had an excellent opportunity of observing, and of forming a correct estimate of the character, position, capacity, and respectability of the commercial body. That estimate was highly favourable; and, at the age of twenty-one, I became a member of the faternity. Glancing through the mist of years which have since elapsed, I find the imaginings of my early days have been fully realised; and I am proud in the opportunity of confessing and declaring, that I know of no other occupation that I have ever desired to exchange for my own. Indeed, I am aware of none that offers so many advantages—of no mode of life, excepting that of an officer in the military service, during the time of peace, that can be at all compared to a commercial traveller's.

Commercial life presents enjoyments superior even to those of the officer, for it occupies the mind as well as the body, without distressing either. The quarters of each (excepting when the officer is in barracks, and there he is in possession of no larger an amount of comfort than is the traveller at his hotel) are the same; his daily mess not one jot better provided, and in all respects similar, only that in commercial life the monotony is relieved by a frequent—an almost unceasing —exchange of its members, who, from the perfect equality and kind-heartedness which predominate in their society, without control, and without the miserable distinction which rank imperiously claims for itself, and vauntingly exercises over others, are more free and able to act with independence. Equality and propriety are the prominent features of the commercial room.

An opinion is unfortunately prevalent among those who have had but little opportunity of judging by experience, that the habits of commercial men and commercial life are vicious and depraved; that one unchecked, unheeded, and unbounded scene of vice is predominant with its members; and that if not obscenity, yet demoralisation and revelry are constant, and not only tolerated but encouraged in the commercial room. This opinion, however, is a gross libel upon the body; for although an equalised authority in some measure prevents in commercial society, as in every other large and free constitution, individuals from acting at all times with perfect consistency, there is no class of men like them with an equal weight of responsibility upon their shoulders—subject to no immediate check or governance by a superior power—so much deprived of the pleasures of home and the soothing influence and happiness of the domestic circle, momentarily surrounded by objects of excitement, assailed by and subject to every description of temptation—who, living together unrestricted, bound only by the influence of custom, example, and compliance, either conduct themselves more correctly and respectably, or can lay claim to a more exalted position in the moral world.

In truth, to be respected and successful a determined resistance must characterise their career, or, as principals, from the constitution of business and the value of time, they cannot long exist, and, as representatives, brief indeed will be their opportunity for indulgence. Consequently, men who continue long upon the road are, with very few exceptions, firm in their resistance of impropriety. And in proportion to the evil to be overcome the greater is the credit due. To withstand the excesses and bewitching seductions which on all hands present themselves requires a decision of character that becomes the more inflexible the more it is exercised; and the capability of resisting is far more praiseworthy than the untried morality and virtue of the recluse—the piety of the inmates of a cloister—who are too frequently virtuous only because they are not exposed to temptation, or than the cold prudence and strictness of the man whose manners and conduct are restrained by the usages of refined society.

A commercial man who discharges his duty conscientiously has, indeed, little time for aught but business; and although a playfulness of disposition may be produced by his bustling, healthy occupation, and an external appearance of cheerfulness may characterise his proceedings, he will not unfrequently, while bearing a smile on his brow, have corroding cares within. Yet, so consecutive are his duties, that he has rarely an opportunity of dwelling, or time for reflecting upon, any casual calamity that may befall him. He sees and promptly acts upon the necessity of setting to work to remove the evil, whether created by himself or by his house, without suffering his temper to be soured more than momentarily, or his mind to be perplexed by what probably the utmost forethought on his part could not have averted. When through the successful exercise of tact and ability the trivial annoyance has passed away, his mind resumes the cheerfulness which all men possess when they feel satisfied with themselves, and confident that, by a conscientious discharge of their duty, whatever may be the result, they have done justice to their employers.

The emolument, too, derived from a commercial occupation is usually good. Indeed, there are commercial houses, not few in number, which so support and remunerate their representatives that many, enamoured of the mode of life and happy in the prosecution of their business, would hardly exchange situations with their employers were bondage at home to be the price of the advantage. For, acting in the capacity of agents, without being immediately responsible, they have the stimulants of business, with the certainty of remuneration, and the cheering excitement of hope, without either the perpetually harassing cares of the former or the too often painful disappointment of the latter. Their capital is their reputation, their freehold their connection, their remuneration is in their industry and ability. Freely following— subject, of course, to proper business restrictions—a respectable, responsible, honourable pursuit, without the restraints inseparable from a life invariably passed at home, commercial travellers enjoy a satisfaction and good fellowship with the brotherhood of which the world beyond knows comparatively little. And all this, be it remembered, is in superaddition to the opportunities they possess of indulging their curiosity, gratifying their inclinations, and acquiring a knowledge of circumstances and events, with all that appertains to man and the world, more successfully, if advantage be taken, than can be accomplished in any other sphere. Travelling through the country, too, either by their own or one of the many public conveyances —leisurely beholding its beauties and enjoying its sceneries, trafficking with its population, negotiating with its natives, penetrating into the very heart of its society, and gaining a knowledge of the people's habits and dialect—commercial men are enabled to compare and enjoy the never-ending diversity of character which everywhere presents itself. Thus they become acquainted with the operations of the human mind, through all its countless phases and gradations, and are made cognisant of various propensities, prejudices, and antipathies that bias and control mankind, and which, above all, enable them to attain the desideratum,— without either being influenced by the one or guided and controlled by the other. Thus, too, they are blest with the opportunity for perfecting their judgment, and avoiding the shoals and quicksands of excess, and the thousand incentives to dissipation which would otherwise draw them from their duties and disqualify them for their avocation. They are in the full enjoyment of a life abounding with advantages superior to those of the world at large.

Happily to steer

In truth, there cannot be a mode of active life more cheerful, pleasurable, and healthy than theirs. Traversing the kingdom, air, variety, and exercise are ever at command. In the bustling pursuit of business, from east to west, from north to south, they witness an endless variety of scenes in daily life. Incessantly thrown upon some new and unexpected encounter, and ever having thrust upon them greater temptations than any other class of men are or can by possibility be exposed to, they become, as a matter of course, and even in despite of themselves, from contact, experience, and observation, genuine members of the family of man and citizens of the world.

INDEPENDENT ORDER OF RECHABITES.

Sir,—The Great International Conference of the Independent Order of Rechabites Friendly Society is to be held this year in the Albert Hall, Aberdeen, beginning on Tuesday, August 8, when representatives of every district in the British Isles and in the Colonies will assemble for business in connection with that world-wide Order. The reports to be presented by the Board of Directors show that great progress has been made and that the membership has been increased by 42,436 since the last meeting (at Swansea), and the funds also show an increase of £211,473 9*s.* 2*d.*, the membership now being 346,213 and the funds £1,526,500 13*s.* 3*d.*

Representatives are already in this country from the various Australian Colonies, viz.: Victoria, South Australia, New South Wales, and Queensland, and also from South Africa and India. I am, yours sincerely,

Richardson Campbell,
Secretary.

From Messrs. S. C. Brown, Langham & Co., Ltd.—'The Meaning of the Mass: Five Lectures, with other Sermons and Addresses,' by Stewart D. Headlam. After reading this work we feel that we owe the author an apology. We have hitherto regarded him as something of a poseur—a man who had achieved notoriety some years ago by his generous advocacy of the dramatic profession, and had since sought to keep himself abreast of public recognition by a bountiful display of broad-minded, not to say eccentric opinions. The present volume discloses him in quite a different light. Independence of opinion there undoubtedly is, but it is expressed in so frank, unstudied a fashion, with such conscientiousness of conviction, as to absolve the author of all effort at theatrical effect. The reader, if he be of a wide, liberal disposition, will gain much good from studying these addresses.

From Messrs. Burns & Oates.—'St. Catherine de' Ricci: her Life, her Letters, her Community,' by F. M. Capes; preceded by a Treatise on the Mystical Life, by F. Bertrand Wilberforce, O.P. This work, as the author points out, presents the saint under three distinct aspects: as the pure mystic; as the practical religious superior in her own community; and as the essentially loving and tender woman, spreading beneficent influence around as far as 'the circumstances of her calling allowed.' The words 'as far as the circumstances of her calling allowed are a little significant, seeing that St. Catherine de' Ricci belonged to an order of a strictly contemplative life, far removed from the active world and doing little beyond what was essential for its own support. The book is interesting as a study and will certainly provide much material for reflection. There are several illustrations.

From the Chichester Press.—'Royal Commission on Coal Supplies' (three vols.). This digest of the evidence given before the Royal Commission is reprinted from the Colliery Guardian, has been revised by the witnesses, and is converted from questions and answers into narrative form. The first volume, which is before us, deals with 'The Working of Thin Seams,' 'The Limit of Depth in Mining,' 'Waste in Working,' and 'Coal Cutting by Machinery'; and the expert opinion herein gathered together upon these subjects cannot fail to be of immense value to all those interested in our coal supply. There is an introductory chapter on the early history of the coal question. The treatment of coal after its arrival at the surface, and all matters connected with its use and transport, are left for discussion in the other two volumes.

From Messrs. Archibald Constable & Co., Ltd.—'Electric Railways,' by Sydney W. Ashe, B.S., and J. D. Keiley. The absence of a modern text-book on electric railways embodying the recent developments in electric traction has led the authors to prepare this volume. Their aim has been to treat the subject from a theoretical as well as from a practical standpoint, so as to produce a book which could be used as a text in Technical Institutions as well as a general engineering reference book for those interested in railway problems. The authors are American engineers, but their work has been done with German thoroughness and completeness. There are many illustrations, plans, calculations, figures, &c, and the index is a full one. An excellent work, well arranged, and more than well written.

From Mr. C. W. Daniel, 3 Amen Corner, E.C. 'Greek Religion: a Brief Summary of the Myths, Theology, and the Leading Philosophical Doctrines of the Ancient Greeks,' by William Loftus Hare. This forms one of a series of six little books on the world's religion. Considering the limited space at Mr. Hare's command, he has accomplished wonders, and his work will be found both interesting and instructive. Among other attractively bound booklets received from Mr. Daniel are 'Gospel Poverty,' by C. S. Johann, in which the author, while discoursing of Compassion, Meekness, Righteousness, Purity, and like subjects, pleads for a higher, more generous interpretation of the Gospel; and 'Everlasting Punishment,' by F. J. M. Iredell, a vigorously propounded argument against the theory of everlasting damnation.

From Messrs. Dawbarn & Ward, Ltd.—'Pattern Making,' by Joseph E. Dangerfield. This is a very practical little manual, sparing of words, clear in its guidance, and very usefully illustrated. The home worker will find it of invaluable assistance.

From Mr. Arthur C. Fifield, 44 Fleet Street, E.C.—'The Higher Love: a Plea for a Nobler Conception of Human Love,' by George Barlow. The three essays in this issue of the 'Simple Life Series,' are reprinted from the Contemporary Review. They treat of 'The Higher Love,' 'The Transfiguration of Matter,' and 'The Feminine Element in Deity.' Many refined thoughts are enunciated, but on the whole we prefer the author in his natural element—poesy.

From Mr. Alexander Gardner, Paisley.—'Search Light: being Fag-ends of Busy Days put into Verse,' by G. Houston Mowat. The author is a little indiscreet in saying in his preface that the original MS. of most of his poems will be found written on commercial books in every-day use at his business. Many readers will take this literally, and will wonder what manner of business man he could be thus to mingle up versifying with his ledger accounts. However, should they persevere in their perusal, they will speedily gain the impression that Mr. Mowat is profoundly matter-of-fact, and allows himself few of those exalted excursions into the realms of imagination that usually distinguish poets. He starts thus:

'Never be subordinate to others
When you can create an issue
By application of the same work.
It's only stretching out your arm
A little further than it has already gone,
And making capital of the power you possess.'

The common sense of this can scarcely be questioned, but is it poetry? Other of Mr. Mowat's verses display rather more rhythm, but on the whole we are disposed to think it would have been better if he had utterly discarded his business instincts.

From Messrs. Gardner, Darton & Co., Ltd. 'The Story of the Beginning: Genesis in the Light of Recent Research,' by Mrs. Frederic Green. The influence of religion is declining, if we are to judge by the constantly sounded warning of its advocates. Even in the family circle a spirit of unbelief penetrates, shown in the disinclination to accept anything on trust. This little work constitutes an attempt to present the great truths of the Biblical foundation in such simple, direct language as young people can appreciate, and that will ease their minds of doubt. Bishop Ryle in his short Introduction speaks most highly of both the purpose and workmanship of the book.

From Mr. L. Upcott Gill.—'The Jappy System of Cork-Grip Exercises.' The merit of the grip system, we understand, lies in its simplicity and inexpensiveness, rendering it suitable to all grades of society, neither taxing pocket nor strength. No dumb-bells or expensive developers are required. The book contains a series of fourteen exercises calculated to improve the physical health, with numerous explanatory illustrations. 'Jappy' tells his readers that his chief aim is to benefit his fellow-beings, and to assist in bringing about 'that higher ideal in national physique so much desired by social reformers.'

From The Green Sheaf, 3 Park Mansions Arcade, Knightsbridge, S.W.—'The Book of Hours,' by Alix Egerton. Many pretty conceits are expressed in this little volume of verse, and the artistic manner of its production undoubtedly adds to its attraction. The illustrations, initial letters, and tailpieces are in crude positive colour, which however against the black of the type produces rather a pleasing effect. Here is a sample, taken at random, of the author's powers:

'We are seated together, dear one, you and I,
And I swear that I love you, and will till I die,
And you vow you love me; but the wind with a sigh
Whispers soft to the trees "How they try, how they try,
But they'll never know love till they die, till they die,
They will never know love till thev die, till they die."'

The reader will possibly think this very pretty, but 'that and nothing more.' And the reader will possibly be right.

From the same.—'A Sheaf of Songs,' by Alfred C. Calmour. The author will always be appreciatively remembered by his poetic play of 'The Amber Heart,' in which Miss Ellen Terry appeared some few years ago. Since then he has achieved success in a stage version of the woes of Dante and Beatrice, which had a considerable run in Manchester, and subsequently found its way to the metropolis. His present verses can scarcely be pronounced representative of his powers, but they are very charming nevertheless. They have the taking lilt that distinguishes the preceding volume (and indeed one might imagine they came from the same author), as witness

'Only yester e'en I said I would not remain a maid,
When my honey, when my honey
Had a pocket full of money,
With a dainty little meadow, and a cottage o'er the lea;
So I'll share with you, dear honey,
Both your cottage and your money,
And your dainty little meadow, if you ll only marry me.'

This is perhaps foolishness, but very captivating at that.

From Messrs. Jarrold & Sons.—'The Poets Laureate, from the Earliest Times to the Present,' by J. C. Wright. This little work, of which a new and enlarged edition is now published, might well have been entitled an appreciation of Southey, Wordsworth, and Tennyson, for it is to these three laureates that Mr. Wright chiefly directs attention, and the earlier poets, with the exception of Dryden, who is accorded the honour of a few extra lines, are treated in groups. In regard to Southey, Wordsworth, and Tennyson, however, the reader may gain much pleasantly imparted information from Mr. Wright's book. A chapter has now been added, giving some particulars about Mr. Alfred Austin, but no mention is made of this, we notice, in the table of contents.

From Messrs. Longmans, Green & Co.—'The Earthly Paradise: a Poem,' by William Morris. Four volumes. We have frequently, in these columns, testified our high appreciation of 'The Silver Library,' the suitability of its contents, excellence of printing, quality of paper, neatness of binding, and so forth; and the addition of Mr. William Morris's 'Earthly Paradise' supplies yet another instance of the admirable control kept over this series. Admirers of Morris, we are sure, will be quick to detect the merits of this edition, so splendidly equipped from a typographical point of view, and yet so modestly endowed in the matter of price.

From Mr. Elkin Mathews.—'A Mainsail Haul,' by John Masefield. There is much rough vigour in these yarns thoroughly suitable to their character. Seeing that the better part were related to the author by an old sailor, this is scarcely to be wondered at. But that Mr. Masefield should have been able to reproduce so realistically the sea-salt's method of narration is infinitely to his credit. Some of the stories a little lack substance, but take them as a whole they will afford an evening's pleasant recreation for those partial to the sea, its traditions, and toilers. The frontispiece to the volume is by Mr. Jack B. Yeats.

From the same.—'Sweetbriar: a Pastoral with Songs,' by Dorothea Gore Browne, illustrated by Edith Calvert. A delicate fancy, coupled with no slight dexterity in verse-weaving, distinguishes this booklet. Of the plot of the play we can scarcely say much, though it suffices for the purpose, but of its execution and the sprightly charm that lurks beneath the lines we have every appreciation. The little volume is both good to look upon (its 'get-up' being extremely artistic) and to read.—Among other collections of verse we have received from Mr. Mathews, which considerations of space alone prevent us from noticing at length, are 'De Flagello Myrteo: Thoughts and Fancies of Love,' in which the author, among other poetic fancies, sets forth that the purpose of love is to make 'two lives as beautiful as God desires and the world will permit'; 'The Tragedy of Asgard,' by Victor Plarr, a work of a lofty, ambitious conception which scarcely realises the efforts of the writer; and 'The Nets of Love,' by Wilfred Wilson Gibson. The general impression left upon us by these works is that there is a tremendous wealth of refined poesy in the world. Which is perhaps as well, considering the material influence of the modern everyday world.

From Messrs. Alexander Moring, Ltd.—'The Household of Sir Thomas More,' by Anne Manning. We cannot but think the Introduction of Dr. Richard Garnett will contribute an adventitious interest to this volume of 'The King's Novels,' in which the daintiness of the binding and general 'get-up' will participate. The life of Sir Thomas More is very beautiful indeed, we might say affecting, but it lacks the attributes that appeal to ordinary readers of the present day. However, beauty of externals counts for much just now in the book trade, and we trust it may be so in the present case.

From Mr. John Murray.—'Women and Wisdom of Japan,' with an Introduction by Shingoro Takaishi; 'The Teachings of Zoroaster and the Philosophy of the Parsi Religion,' by S. A. Kapadia, M.D. The 'Wisdom of the East' series, of which these two volumes form a part, has a very distinct and laudable aim. It is that the works published under this title shall be 'ambassadors of goodwill and understanding between East and West, the Old World of Thought and the New of Action.' The editors are confident that 'a deeper knowledge of the great ideals and lofty philosophy of Oriental thought may help to a revival of that true spirit of charity which neither despises nor fears the nations of another creed and colour.' We may say that the volumes now before us are admirably calculated to carry out the praiseworthy designs of Mr. L. Cranmer-Byng and Dr. S. A. Kapadia, the editors of the series. They are excellently written, of wide knowledge, and tactful in their description of native idiosyncrasies.

From Mr. Eveleigh Nash.—'An Eye-Witness in Manchuria,' by Lord Brooke. Until the complete and authoritative history of the Russo-Japanese war appears it is quite evident there will be given to us many records of the great struggle for race supremacy in the Far East. Lord Brooke, the author of the volume before us, was privileged for nine months to be in close contact with the Russian forces, and the 'personal experience' gained by him he has now published for English readers. In such epoch-making incidents of the war as the great battle of Liao-yang, and the Sha-Ho battle, fought subsequently, the descriptive powers of the writer are of a high order, forcibly reminding us of the renowned account, by another hand, of the famous fight that raged around the heights of Plevna. Space prevents us from doing justice thereto by quotation. However absorbed the author seems to be in his depiction of such stirring episodes, he does not fail to take intense interest in his surroundings, and varied traits of national character presenting themselves while on the march or in camp that often elude the erudite historian of a campaign. These help in some measure to lighten the gloom otherwise prevalent in dealing with the horrors surrounding such momentous themes. It is a book well worth reading, containing as it does much that is of abiding interest for the military expert and the modern historical reader.

From Mr. David Nutt (Edinburgh: Mr. Norman Macleod).—'Deirdire and the Lay of the Children of Uisne,' orally collected in the island of Barra and literally translated by Alexander Carmichael. This quaint story is said to have been related by one John Macneill, otherwise known as 'Tain Doun,' 'brown John,' a cottar at Buile-Nambodach, who at the time of its recital was over eighty years of age. It possesses the impressive simplicity and freedom from exaggeration which is characteristic of Gaelic tales, and is altogether an extremely interesting piece of work. In the ancient stories of northern Scotland the superstitious belief of the narrator in the truth of his theme added in no small degree to the charm of his recital, and this is a valuable asset in the present work. There are humble men even now in the Highlands who can hold the far more intellectual listener spell-bound by the attraction of their firm belief in the magic of the simple legends they relate. Of such a character is Deirdire, though it is of deeds of prowess that the historian tells us. The Gaelic, we may say, is printed on the left-hand page, and the English translation on the right hand.

From the same.—'A Handbook of the Cornish Language, chiefly in its Latest Stages, with some Account of its History and Literature,' by Henry Jenner. The main object of this work, as set forth in the Preface, is to provide persons of Cornish nationality with such a knowledge of their ancient tongue as will enable them to read, write, and it may be even to speak it. 'Its aim is to represent in an intelligible form the Cornish of the later period, and since it is addressed to the general Cornish public rather than to the skilled philologist, much has been left unsaid that might have been of interest to the latter. Old-fashioned phonological and grammatical terms have been used, a uniform system of spelling has been adopted, little notice has been taken of casual variations, and the arguments upon which the choice of forms has been based have not often been given.' The volume, affording a wide insight into the dialect of the county, is bound to interest all literary Cornishmen, and Mr. Jenner may be complimented on the zeal and industry he has shown in its production.

From the Religious Tract Society.—'The Ambitions of Jenny Ingram: a True Story of Modern London Life,' by Flora Klickmann. In the village of Brockweir, in the Wye Valley, there reside the family of a doctor's widow, one daughter of whom is the heroine of the story now under notice. Her ambition is to become a celebrity in literary London. The incentive to this resolve has been the acceptance by the editor of a magazine named the Woman's Press of some verses written by her and entitled 'Heart Echoes.' Her anticipations of future fame as a contributor to 'the world of books' are, however, dispelled by a mutual friend, and likewise the young man of her choice. After an experience in the vortex of that little circle which calls itself 'literary society,' and the apparent failure of her efforts to make her mark therein, Jenny at last has to content herself with a domestic career shared with her candid husband, Gilbert Hurst. It is a really interesting story for girls, and it is effectively illustrated.

From Messrs. Seeley & Co., Ltd.—'The Renaissance of Sculpture in Belgium,' by Olivier Georges Destrée. This is certainly not the least attractive of the volumes issued under the title of 'The Portfolio Monographs on Artistic Subjects.' The author introduces his subject with an interesting sketch of the history of Belgian sculpture from the eleventh century to 1830, and thence proceeds to a consideration of contemporary Belgian sculptors, the Flemish sculptors, the Walloon sculptors, and so on. Among the illustrations are four finely produced examples of J. P. De Vigne, Jef Lambeaux, Julien Dillens, and Constantin Meunier, while the other artists represented include Van der Stappen, T. Vincotte, Jacques de Lalaing, Jules Lagaë, Jean Marie Gaspar, and Victor Rousseau. The production of the volume is marked by careful editing and superior artistic finish.

We have received from Mr. Alexander Gardner, of Paisley, a copy of a neatly gotten up and practical pocket guide to 'House Choosing and Furnishing,' written by M. Harriette Brown, with full knowledge of the subject.

'The Doctrine of God,' by the Rev. Francis J. Hall, D.D., of Chicago, U.S., comprising the first volume of the author's 'Theological Outlines,' has reached a second and revised edition, a copy of which has been sent us by Mr. William Walker, his London publisher.

PUBLICATIONS OF THE WEEK.

WITH AN INDEX OF AUTHORS, TITLES, AND SUBJECTS OF BOOKS IN ONE ALPHABET.

All books are in cloth when not otherwise described. When the word 'net' is printed against the price of a book it means that there is not the usual trade allowance. The words of the Index which are printed in italics refer to the name under which the title of a work appears in larger type. Publishers who observe the omission of a book from the list will confer a favour by sending a copy of the title to the office for insertion in the next number.

'WHERE'S WHERE?'

VOL. I.

FRANCE

PRICE 2s. 6d. NET.

'WHERE'S WHERE?' is a new and novel guide book to France, compiled somewhat on the A B C principle, giving only the briefest and most practical information, and covering the whole of France.

'WHERE'S WHERE?' gives many practical hints of the greatest service to travellers in France. The special and wonderfully advantageous system of Circular Tickets on the lines of the various French railway companies, the traveller choosing his own route.

'WHERE'S WHERE?' gives all fares in English money, and routes are quoted on the best of authorities. A special feature of the book is the detailed information given as to routes, changes of train, station of departure in Paris, and the cases where a Circular Ticket will be found to answer best.

'WHERE'S WHERE?' enables the tourist to find his way easily about any part of France.

THE REVIEW OF REVIEWS says: 'All the information which the book contains has been carefully compiled with the aid of the most experienced travellers, and most of the entries have been submitted for examination and verification to the best local authorities on the spot.'

EDUCATIONAL NUMBER.

Messrs. METHUEN'S NEW BOOKS

A STRIKING NOVEL BY HELEN MATHERS WILL BE PUBLISHED ON AUGUST 17.

THE FERRYMAN. By HELEN MATHERS. Crown 8vo. 6*s.*

'The Ferryman' is Paul Vravanel, who ferries across the Styx all those broken-hearted and afflicted ones to whom life is a long-drawn-out agony, and who have prayed in vain of Charon to merge their sufferings in the profound peace, the blessedness of death. Of the difficulties that beset Paul in his fulfilment of 'Tom Shippon's trust,' and the administration of the vast fortune left in his hands for the voluntary removal of the physically unfit, the story treats.

Incidentally, Death is presented, not as an affrighting spectre, but as a strong beautiful man, who, full of pity, of tenderness, himself the viceroy of Christ, inasmuch as, like his Master, who 'giveth His beloved sleep,' he too, after that long slumber, promises something better far than earth has yet afforded to man.

THIRD EDITION.

THE COMPLETE GOLFER. By Harry Vardon. With numerous Illustrations. Demy 8vo. 10*s.* 6*d.* net.

'Harry Vardon has produced a most instructive and entertaining book on the game of which he is such a brilliant exponent.'—Truth.

'For the finesse of the game we know no book so lucid and so sensible.'—Outlook.

'Harry Vardon never leaves us in doubt as to his meaning, and he brings to the succour of his pen a pleasant geniality and optimism.'—Times.

SECOND EDITION.

HOME LIFE IN FRANCE. By Miss Betham-Edwards. With many Illustrations. Demy 8vo. 7*s.* 6*d.* net.

'It bears in every chapter evidence that its information is derived from personal observation and inquiry. The book is well illustrated.'—Morning Post.

'This charming book is as original as it is fascinating and instructive. The reader who knows it will know French ways as a Frenchmen does. It is calculated to sweep away more nonsense than a score of arbitration treaties.'—Daily Telegraph.

SECOND EDITION IN THE PRESS.

WITH THE RUSSIANS IN MANCHURIA. By the Hon. Maurice Baring. Demy 8vo. 7*s.* 6*d.* net.

'The leisurely and scholarly charm of Mr. Baring is not a little remarkable when it is remembered that this is a book straight out of the heart of a fierce and most bloody war. Among books on the war this is a very uncommon one.'—Daily Chronicle.

THE CITIES OF UMBRIA. By Edward Hutton. With many Illustrations, of which 20 are in Colour, by A. Pisa. Crown 8vo. 6*s.*

NAPLES. By A. H. Norway. With 25 Coloured Illustrations by Maurice Greiffenhagen. New Edition. Crown 8vo. 6*s.*

This book is a picturesque and romantic description of Naples, telling its history, recounting its traditions, and generally filling in the gaps which the best of guide-books must leave. The coloured illustrations by Mr. Greiffenhagen are extremely vivid and charming.

THE NORFOLK BROADS. By W. A. Dutt. With Coloured and other Illustrations by Frank Southgate. Cheaper Edition. Crown 8vo. 6*s.*

'A very instructive and entertaining volume.'—Field.

A HISTORY OF EGYPT, from the Earliest Times to the Present Day. By W. M. Flinders Petrie, D.C.L., LL.D., Professor of Egyptology at University College. Fully Illustrated, in 6 vols. Crown 8vo. 6*s.* each. Vol. III.—Dynasties XIX.-XXX. This is the last volume of the series to be issued.

'It is a most comprehensive work and the writer is a great and indefatigable worker.'
Daily Chronicle.

'The fine flower of Egyptology is seen throughout this notable volume.'—Morning Leader.

THE IMPERIAL DRUG TRADE. By Joshua Rowntree. Crown 8vo. 5*s.* net.

SHREWSBURY. By T. Auden, M.A., F.S.A. Illustrated. Crown 8vo, 4*s.* 6*d.* net. [Ancient Cities.

'Learned, accurate, and readable.'—Academy.

A Book called in Latin

ENCHIRIDION MILITIS CHRISTIANI, and in English the Manual of the Christian Knight, replenished with most wholesome precepts, made by the famous clerk Erasmus of Roterdame, to the which is added a new and marvellous profitable preface.

From the edition printed by Wynken de Worde for John Byddell, 1533. Fcap. 8vo. 3*s.* 6*d.* net.

THE BUSINESS OF ADVERTISING. By Clarence G. Moran, Barrister-at-law. Illustrated. Crown 8vo. 2*s.* 6*d.* net. [Books on Business.

'The work contains a mass of extremely useful information.'—Financial Times.

CIVIL ENGINEERING. By T. Claxton Fidler, M.Inst.C.E., Professor of Engineering, University College, Dundee, in the University of St. Andrews. Illustrated. Crown 8vo. 2*s.* 6*d.* net. [Books on Business.

ELEMENTARY EXPERIMENTAL CHEMISTRY. By A. E. Dunstan, B.Sc., Head of the Chemical Department, East Ham Technical College. With many Illustrations. Crown 8vo. 2*s.* [Methuen's Junior School Books.

REFLECTIONS ON THE FRENCH REVOLUTION. By Edmund Burke. Crown 8vo. 6*d.* net; cloth, 1*s.* net. [Methuen's Standard Library.

THE FIRST EDITION IS EXHAUSTED.
A SECOND EDITION IS NEARLY READY.

VIVIEN. By W. B. Maxwell, Author of 'The Ragged Messenger.' Crown 8vo. 6*s.*

This is the story of a girl's life, studied with a closeness that is perhaps both unusual and original. The keynote to the heroine's character is her horror of the ugliness of life itself, but fate has ordered that she is to see and understand much that is carefully guarded from the knowledge of home-walled young ladies, as well as much that is beautiful and pleasant. The writer has endeavoured to treat his subject philosophically, and has planned his work on a large scale. The book contains strong contrasts, with changes of scene from misery to splendour, and innumerable social types are submitted to the reader's consideration.

SECOND EDITION IN THE PRESS.

A JAY OF ITALY. By Bernard Capes. Crown 8vo. 6*s.*

'The best book Mr. Capes has written, an imaginary portrait of the most exquisite kind. It has something of the great simplicity. Mr. Capes could find no better subject than the period and the people he has nobly realised and vigorously painted.'—Times.

'The book shows its author's talent in a characteristic example, and will be read with keen interest by those who like a spirited and warmly coloured romance.'—Scotsman.

SECOND EDITION IN THE PRESS.

THE PARISH NURSE. By Mary E. Mann. Crown 8vo. 6*s.*

'A thoroughly readable book. There is plenty of movement, and the interest is cleverly maintained.'—East Anglian Times.

THE MARQUIS OF PUTNEY. By Richard Marsh. Crown 8vo. 6*s.*

SECOND EDITION IN THE PRESS.

THE LADY OF LYTE. By Graham Hope. Crown 8vo. 6*s.*

SECOND EDITION IN THE PRESS.

A TRAGEDY IN COMMONPLACE. By M. Urquhart. Crown 8vo. 6*s.*

'There is observation of life in it, there is humour, and there is a sense of pathos. It looks almost like a transcript from actual life.'—Daily Mail.

'It has a quiet distinction which is very refreshing, and the character-drawing shows unusual skill. Altogether it is a fine book, a really strong novel.'—Morning Leader.

'The book is conspicuous by reason of its skill and power, and the literary style throughout possesses finish, terseness, and grace.'—World.

MRS. LYGON'S HUSBAND. By Adeline Sergeant. Crown 8vo. 6*s.*

'A cleverly constructed novel.'—Speaker.

'The story is quiet but absorbing, written with practised ease and ready effect, and shows the author at her very best.'—Morning Leader.

'The novel is full of incident, and will be read with satisfaction. A wonderfully convincing study of certain phases of human nature.'—Scotsman.

'A good story, holding the reader's interest throughout by a well-considered succession of incident and a gradually unfolded mystery.'—Daily Chronicle.

SECOND EDITION IN THE PRESS.

BEHIND THE THRONE. By William Le Queux. Crown 8vo. 6*s.*

'The atmosphere is a happy blend of romance and politics, and the story is a very readable one.'—Pall Mall Gazette.

THE VALLEY OF INHERITANCE. By V. Langbridge and C. Harold Bourne. Crown 8vo. 6*s.*

Evening Standard.

TEXT BOOKS AND READERS

PUBLISHED BY THE

Church of England Temperance Society.

A FIRST READER IN HEALTH AND TEMPERANCE.

For use in Schools for Standard IV. and upward.

Written specially, and embodying the suggestions in the petitions of the Medical Profession to the Education Authorities, and dealing with most of the topics specified in the Outline Scheme for teaching Hygiene and Temperance issued by the Board of Education. By W. Taylor, Master of Method, &c., Battersea Training College. Fully illustrated. Cloth, 1s. 6d. [Just ready.

It is believed that this Reader will furnish what is needed for Elementary Schools, as well as an introductory course of reading for the Lower and Middle Forms of Secondary Schools. The following are its special features:—

(1) It presents in a simple and clear form as much information about the structure and functions of the body as is suitable for Children in the Fourth and higher Standards of Elementary Schools.

(2) It deals carefully with food, clothing, and ventilation; with useful and hurtful drinks; with tobacco and smoking; with the necessity for cleanliness of body, clothes, and dwelling place; with rest, sleep, bodily exercise, and recreation.

(3) It describes the nature and physical effects of alcohol; it points out the evils and dangers attendant on juvenile smoking.

(4) A simple account is given of the nervous system and its functions, and the serious effects upon it of alcohol and other narcotics; and it explains how all self-indulgence hurts the character as well as the nervous system.

(5) It is written by a widely-known teacher of experience, and is in a clear, interesting style. It is illustrated with a large number of drawings and diagrams specially prepared for it, and is printed in large type; short summaries of each lesson, and glossaries of words needing explanation, are also given.

'These little books supply a great want.'—
Dr. W. H. ROUSE.

This new and altogether unique Series of dainty booklets embraces all classes of French Literature—Travels, Stories of Adventure, Scenes of Domestic Life, Essays, Letters, Poetry, and Drama—so graduated in difficulty and so varied in matter as to be suitable for readers of all stages of advancement. Many authors hitherto unobtainable in a suitable form for class reading are represented, as, for example, Bossuet, Balzac, Stendhal, Rousseau, and Pascal.

⁂ Complete Lists on application.

Little English Classics

Price 6d. each Book.

This new and highly excellent series provides in small compass the works of many of the best-known and most famous authors. The aim has been to include only such books as are of permanent value, and have some bearing upon the development of the national life, character, and literature. In every case the books selected are good as literature, stimulating, varied, and enlightening; books, indeed, which every well-educated person should know, and which, if once read, are sure to be valued and read again. Each volume is provided with a brief introduction dealing with the author's life and place in literature.

AN ATLAS OF COMMERCIAL GEOGRAPHY.

EDITED BY

R. FERGUSON SAVAGE, F.R.G.S.,

Author of 'A New Geography of the World.'

This new Atlas contains 46 coloured Maps, 6 pages of notes on the Maps, and complete Index. It has been prepared with the greatest possible care, and is probably the most complete School Atlas of its kind. A quotation from the Preface says: 'Indeed it may reasonably be claimed that all the facts shown, whether directly commercial or indirectly so, and each item of information which may be inferred from an intelligent study of the Maps, ought to form part and parcel of what may be termed the permanent geographical stock-in-trade of any educated youth.'

PROSPECTUS, with two Specimen Maps, two pages of letterpress, and full details, posted to any Teacher on application.

A Specimen Copy of the Atlas sent post free to Head Teachers for 3s.

NEW WALL ATLAS MAPS.

For Class Teaching of New Zealand, Central and South Africa, Australia, India, Canada and West India Islands and British Empire, showing means of communication.

These Maps are strongly coloured, and have the physical features very bold and clear, but names visible to Teachers only. Size of each Map, 30 in. by 40 in. Price of each on Cloth and Rollers, Varnished, 6s. each. Complete Atlas, £1 1s.

JOHNSTON'S NEW CENTURY GLOBE.

21s. Net to Schools.

An up-to-date 12-inch Terrestrial Globe, showing the latest changes in South Africa and elsewhere. British Possessions coloured in red. The cover is printed in W. & A. K. Johnston's best style. It shows ocean currents, isothermal lines, and date line. The Globe has a strong metal semi-meridian marked in degrees. The stand is of heavy metal, and gives designs of the Rose, Thistle, and Shamrock. The best Globe for Schools. A packing case is included in the charge of 21s.

LATELY PUBLISHED.

JOHNSTON'S DIAGRAMS ON HYGIENE.

Illustrating a Course of Popular Health Lectures.

By R. J. COLLIE, M.D.

Medical Superintendent of the Evening Continuation Classes of the London County Council, and Assistant Medical Officer to the Council.

The Lectures which these Diagrams are intended to illustrate have been given in a selected number of Evening Classes in London, under the direction of Dr. COLLIE, and according to a Syllabus drawn up by him.

Their object is to bring the subject of Hygiene more directly under the notice of the pupils attending these Classes, and to demonstrate its practical application to their lives and habits.

The Diagrams are 35 by 45 inches, boldly printed. Mounted on Cloth, Rollers, and Varnished, price 8s. each; also made up in Two Parts, six in each, in Ornamental Covers, each Sheet mounted on Cloth, fastened to one top Roller, with Suspenders, and weighted at the bottom with metal to prevent curling up, price 35s. each part. When rolled up the whole series occupies a space only 35 by 12 inches.

This Series hopes to meet two needs: (a) to supply senior pupils with specimens of certain standard French authors at a small price; (b) to supply junior pupils with suitable term Readers. Each Reader consists of about 36 pages of text, and has short introduction giving a few details of the author's life and works, with special reference to the particular book in question, and short notes on grammar, and on the geographical, historical, and literary allusions of the text. Long grammatical discussions will be avoided by referring to standard works where those who desire further information may find it.

The following are ready:

1. Alexandre Dumas: Jacomo. Edited by F. W. WALTON, M.A., Librarian of King's College, London. A thrilling story of brigandage in Calabria in the early years of the nineteenth century, told in Dumas's well-known style.

DEAN'S NEW EDUCATIONAL WORKS.

THE ASTOR PROSE SERIES.

N.B.—These works will be found of great service by all engaged in education. They exactly fill the place of supplementary books for teachers recommended by the Board of Education for the higher classes of Elementary, and the lower of Secondary Schools.

The Age of Fable.

A popular but scholarly account of Greek, Roman, and Norse Mythology, with Chapters on Eastern Mythology and the Druids. By THOMAS BULFINCH. New edition, neatly and strongly bound in cloth gilt, with frontispiece, 2*s*. 6*d*. net.

Education.—'His endeavour is—and it may at once be said that he is successful in his attempt—"to teach mythology, not as a study, but as a relaxation from study; to give our work the charm of a story-book, yet by means of it to impart a knowledge of an important branch of education."'

Pall Mall Gazette.—'A charming collection of stories from the classical mythology.'

The Age of Chivalry.

Containing an account of the Arthurian Legends, and of 'The Mabinogion.' By THOMAS BULFINCH. 2*s*. 6*d*. net.

Scotsman.—'A good book of healthy reading for the young.'

Teacher.—'We should like to have this book introduced into every school in the British Islands, if not as an ordinary, certainly as a supplementary reader.'

The Legends of Charlemagne.

Giving an interesting account of Charlemagne and the Paladins. By THOMAS BULFINCH. Per Volume, 2*s*. 6*d*. net.

Scotsman.—'A capital book to put into the hands of young readers.'

School World.—'Makes an excellent volume, whether regarded from the point of view of a gift book or a reading book for class work. The introduction is well done, and the succeeding legends and stories are equally well told.'

Academy (in reference to the three books above).—'It is certain that the child who reads them will find the allusiveness of general literature less troublesome.'

School.—'Three interesting volumes filled with a proper appreciation of the romantic spirit.'

The Life of Columbus.

By WASHINGTON IRVING. Revised Edition, with elaborate Appendix and complete Index. With Portrait. 730 pp. 2*s*. 6*d*. net.

Pall Mall Gazette.—'Handy in size, modest in price, and equipped with a very copious index, this volume should prove welcome and useful.'

The Life of Mahomet and his Successors.

By WASHINGTON IRVING. Revised Edition. With Portrait. 481 pp. 2*s*. 6*d*. net.

Recommended by Mr. Rudyard Kipling in a special list of Boys' Books.

The Oregon Trail.

Being Sketches of Prairie and Rocky Mountain Life. By FRANCIS PARKMAN. With an Introduction by EDWARD G. BOURNE, Ph.D. With Portrait. xix + 416 pp. 2*s*. 6*d*. net.

A MARVEL OF CHEAPNESS.

A Dictionary of Quotations in Prose.

By ANNA L. WARD. Fully indexed under author, general topic, and particular subject. An indispensable work of reference both to men of letters and to the general reader. 701 pages. New edition, strongly bound in cloth, 2*s*. 6*d*. net.

Athenæum.—'Deserves praise. . . . Much good thought enshrined from sources less familiar than the trite authors of wit and wisdom.'

Scotsman.—'Comprehensive, well indexed, and convenient in shape as it is, the book will form a helpful adjunct to the libraries of reading men.'

Victor Duruy's History of France.

Abridged and translated by Mrs. M. CAREY. With an Introduction and continuation to the year 1896 by J. FRANKLIN JAMESON, Ph.D., Professor of History in Brown University, U.S.A. 1 vol., cloth, xxvi + 712 pp., with 12 coloured Maps and complete Index. New Edition. 8*s*. 6*d*. net. Or 2 vols., cloth extra, 40 full-page Illustrations, 12*s*. net; 2 vols., half-calf extra, 21*s*. net.

School World.—'It makes a good school book. The most popular text-book of history in French schools.'

New York Herald (Paris edition).—'Of all short summaries of French history, this is probably the best. To readers of French the work needs no recommendation. . . . Mrs. Carey has supplied a translation that is at once faithful and literary. It was an excellent idea to add a supplementary chapter carrying on the narrative to the declaration of a French protectorate over the island of Madagascar (1896). The work is thus as complete as it is admirable.'

Scotsman.—'A very useful manual.'

Victor Duruy's General History of the World.

From the Earliest Times. Revised and Continued to 1901 by E. A. GROSVENOR, Professor of History in Amherst College. New Edition. 1 vol., cloth, xxvi + 746 pp., with 27 coloured Maps and very complete Index. 8*s*. 6*d*. net.

Athenæum.—'Mr. Grosvenor has carried on the story from the Revolution of 1848, the point at which it was dropped by Victor Duruy, down to the year 1901. His supplement is much to his credit, since it compresses a good deal of information into a small space, yet avoids the fault of piling fact upon fact to the bewilderment of the student.'

Scotsman.—'It has the lucidity and conciseness of the best French expository literature, and cannot but prove useful to English students.'

In One Volume, complete, nearly 1,550 pp.

The Rise of the Dutch Republic.

By JOHN LOTHROP MOTLEY. Popular Edition, with Introduction by JOHN FRANKLIN JAMESON, Professor of History in Chicago University, and complete Index. With four Portraits. Printed in a large clear type, strongly bound in cloth, 5*s*. net.

Athenæum.—'Compresses by means of thin paper the whole work into one volume, and includes four portraits and an appreciative note on Motley by Professor J. F. Jameson, of Chicago University. With these advantages (and the index) the edition is likely to be popular with students.'

Glasgow Herald.—'The volume, while adequately bound, is especially noteworthy for its large, clear typography.'

T. P.'s Weekly.—'A particularly good one-volume edition.'

Scotsman.—'Messrs. Dean & Son have done no small service to students and general readers by bringing out an edition of the book complete in one volume at 5*s*. net. The volume is not too unwieldy for easy handling, and is well printed and bound.'

JUST READY.

Handy Dictionary of Prose Quotations.

Compiled by GEORGE W. POWERS. Fully indexed under author, general topic, and particular subject. An indispensable work of reference both to men of letters and to the general reader. Beautifully printed on excellent paper, tinted top, scarlet cloth extra, with frontispiece in half-tone, 364 pp., 1*s*. 6*d*. net.

Extract from the Preface.—'The selections cover a wide range, from the precepts of the Chinese philosopher Confucius to the latest utterances of Senator Hoar and Prince Von Bismarck. The extracts number 2138, and are chosen from the writings of 368 authors.'

UNIFORM WITH THE ABOVE.

Handy Dictionary of Poetical Quotations.

Compiled by GEORGE W. POWERS. Fully indexed under author, general topic, and particular subject. Uniform with 'Prose Quotations.' 370 pp., 1*s*. 6*d*. net.

Sampson Low's Readers.

These New Readers have been specially prepared to meet the Code requirements of INTELLIGENCE, FLUENCY, and EXPRESSION.

Under the able Editorship of JOHN GILL, of Cheltenham.

The Books are graded throughout with the utmost care, and have been revised in the various stages of preparation by many experienced Teachers, Examiners, and other Educationists.

The Pictures, selected from the world's greatest painters, have been prepared at a great cost, and their wealth of art cannot be surpassed.

The type is new and beautiful, and the paper is specially prepared and hot-pressed to prevent soiling by finger marks. The Readers are strongly bound, being sewn on tapes

The purpose held in view in the preparation of these Reading Books has been to furnish lessons adapted to the tastes and capacities of the readers at their several stages of progress, and to make reading not a task but a pleasure. In pursuit of this design, matter has been selected of more than ephemeral interest and educative in the best sense. EACH LESSON CONTAINS a picture, a reading in prose, a piece of poetry, and a proverb, or sentence embodying an important truth.

The reading lessons, prose and poetry, will be found to have been selected from the writings of the best authors in every period of English Literature. Extracts also have been taken from the works of celebrated foreign authors. There are many original lessons. Amongst the writers will be found Sidney, Spenser, Shakespeare, Milton, Defoe, Gay, Gray, Pope, Virgil, Scott, Wordsworth, Southey, Tennyson, Longfellow, Howitt, Day, Opie, Hofland, Edgeworth, Hughes, Dickens, Stanley, Livingstone, Beaugrand, Andersen, Jane Taylor, Hemans, Cowper, Clare, Cook, Park, Bruce, Aitken, Wilson, Lamb, Davy, Arnott, Paul Bert, Perrault, Alcott, Henty, Kingston, and very many others.

Will be READY in SEPTEMBER.

DE FIVAS'

NEW GRAMMAR of FRENCH GRAMMARS

ENLARGED BY THE ADDITION OF CAREFULLY CHOSEN

GRADUATED FRENCH TEXTS FOR PREPARATORY READING AND TRANSLATION

Foolscap 8vo. 474 pages, price 2/6 cloth.

Extracts from Preface to the New (Fifty-seventh) Edition.

In the present Edition, the main body of the work as last revised has been faithfully preserved, but an important addition has been made by the insertion of 258 graduated French Preparatory Texts in prose and verse, one of which precedes each of the original Exercises, for use in reading and translation.

The Publishers feel confident that this valuable practical addition will efficiently complete the lucid theoretical part of the Grammar of French Grammars, and make it a complete Text-Book for the Learner—giving not only clear principles to apply, but practical and varied examples of style, forms of sentences, and arrangements of words to imitate, which cannot fail to be invaluable helps in translating the Exercises. The object throughout has been to assist the student in points where he generally finds difficulties. In the Syntax such extracts have been selected as serve to represent the most varied styles in French literature, in order to familiarise the student not only with the great masters of the language, but also with the more familiar turns of modern conversation.

The new matter added to the present Edition amounts to an enlargement of the Grammar by nearly 80 pages, and the Publishers trust that it will now more than ever be worthy of its title of

GRAMMAR of FRENCH GRAMMARS.

A GREAT EDUCATIONAL EXPERIMENT.

Now that the Cecil Rhodes experiment has been in operation at Oxford for over a year it is very interesting indeed to see how it has worked, especially as regards the important contingent of American students. Forty-three students from the United States, representing the same number of States and Territories, have been enrolled as members of Oxford Colleges, and it is difficult to exaggerate the importance of the fact that these young men, in a measure representing the whole of the United States, will be nourished at one of the fountain-heads of learning in this country, and will carry back to all those States of the Union new ideas, new views of things, and memories of a social and intellectual atmosphere different from anything to be found in their own country. It is certain that Mr. Rhodes had in view not merely educational development; probably what weighed chiefly with him was that nothing could contribute more to a good understanding between England and America than this participation in Oxford University life by trained Americans, who would carry from Oxford to all parts of America something of that life, which will be for the good of both nations. Much of the bad feeling towards this country which existed, and is not yet extinct, in many parts of the United States had its origin in the American educational system. American children were taught, and probably in many districts are still being taught, to dislike, if not to despise, this country; the American Rhodians will, we may be sure, be powerful advocates for reformed and impartial treatment of this country in American histories.

Very interesting reports have been published in America from some of the American students at Oxford, and, as that excellent literary journal the Chicago Dial says, one of the most frank and instructive of them is that of Mr. Paul Nixon, the first Rhodes scholar from Connecticut.

The shortcomings of our Colleges and Universities as compared with those of other countries have been favourite themes for critics, and it is an unexpected pleasure to find such praise of Oxford University life and its results as is given by Mr. Nixon, and by the Dial in commenting on what he says.

Mr. Nixon's first impression of his new University world was that the Oxonian spent most of his time in cultivating athletics and the social amenities, regarding his studies as a matter of secondary importance. Yet, in spite of that surface indication to the contrary, the young Englishman achieved a scholastic standard which his American rival found it difficult to equal. This paradox was eventually explained away by the discovery that the English student works harder at his reading during the long vacation than during term, and, taking the year round, has rather more to show for his efforts than the American student, who, it seems, would scoff at the idea of wasting his playtime in study. We fear that in the following comparisons Mr. Nixon has hardly been just to his own countrymen; he says: 'The conviction is being pungently forced upon us Rhodians, that in many respects the amount of information we've assimilated is not to be compared with that of the brighter of our cousins. It is a fact that in general reading the more studious Oxonian has us at his mercy; in every form of classical scholarship, except that of painstaking investigation of minute obscurities, a favourite pastime in Germany and America, we are "down and out."'

In matters of art and literature the difference, according to Mr. Nixon, is enormous.

'The ordinary American collegian, may be, has heard such names as Murillo and Titian. He's an exception if even the names come to his mind spontaneously. . . . Even our college glee club members are occasionally unable to tell how Mozart differs from Wagner, while, so far as the majority of our collegians can say, Michael Angelo and Dante might have been compatriots, contemporaries, and compeers.'

In knowledge of art and artists, ancient and modern, American collegians are declared to be immeasurably inferior to the Oxonians.

As we said before, it is quite refreshing to find that the education which a youth gets in this country to fit him for Oxford and the education he gets there are admitted—indeed, strongly asserted—by this Rhodian and the critic of the Dial to be in every way more thorough and valuable than is obtainable in America. According to the Dial, the following sentence from Mr. Nixon's report gives us the secret of the Englishman's success in producing men of real culture under his University system:

'The Englishman does not get glimmerings of countless subjects throughout his pre-collegiate days or in colleges. What he gets he keeps getting repeated doses of, and at the completion of his University course in Literæ Humaniores he is saturated with literature, philosophy, history, and economics, ancient and modern.'

With perhaps the single exception of science, Mr. Nixon admits that the American Rhodes scholar finds himself at a disadvantage all along the line, and this, too, in spite of the fact that the American has had from two to four years' more training, of some sort, than the English youth with whom he is brought into competition.

In summing up, the critic of the Dial says: 'If the English schoolboy just entering college is more seriously educated than the American student, who is, at least, half-way through his college work, the fact cannot be too widely advertised, and we cannot any too soon set about discovering the causes of the difference and seeking for the desired remedy.'

We think that if this critic went through the pages of this Educational Number of The Publishers' Circular, and picked out a number of school and class books corresponding with American books of the same character and then compared the books, he would soon get at the causes of the difference; although it must not be taken for granted that English education is so greatly superior to American as these candid American critics make out.

Too Old for Cycling.—Book Agent: Now, sir, can I sell you an encyclopædia? Old John: Noa, I doan't think so. I'm tew old to ride now.—Punch.

NOTES AND ANNOUNCEMENTS.

It would be difficult to speak too highly of the series of Mr. Murray's handy classical maps, edited by Mr. G. B. Grundy, and published separately at 1*s.* net. In addition to being printed in colours they are admirably clear in wording, in the delineation of physical features, and in plans of ancient cities, &c. The new map called 'Mare Ægeum &c.' shows the Ægean Sea, Egypt, Propontis, as well as plans of Rome and Athens at different periods. Each map and plan has an index, and to students of classical history the series is invaluable.

Mr. James Baker, F.R.G.S., has received an invitation from the Belgian Government to be present and to read a paper or papers at the International Congress on 'The Economic Expansion of the World.' The Congress is to be held at Mons, in Belgium, on September 24 and five following days, and some of the chief economists and educationalists of the world are expected to be present. Mr. Baker will probably read a paper on 'Technical Education' as a means to economic expansion.

Her Royal Highness the Princess of Wales has been graciously pleased to accept, for the use of her children, a copy of 'The Children's Book of Old Testament Story,' by Mrs. Francis, published by Messrs. Bemrose.

'History of the Library of Congress' is the title of an important scientific and scholarly work by W. D. Johnson, of which Vol. 1, 1800–64, extending to over 500 pages, has been published at the Government Printing Office, Washington.

We hear that nearly 150,000 copies of the very attractively got-up 'Cameo Classics' have already been sold in cloth at 6*d.* net.

Messrs. Crosby Lockwood & Son will publish in September an entirely new edition of De Fivas' 'Grammar of French Grammars.' This will be the fifty-seventh edition of this invaluable and standard work, to which a new feature has been added by the insertion of more than 250 'Graduated French Texts,' being selections from authors of repute of the most varied styles, each of the original grammatical exercises being now preceded by an appropriate 'text' for use in reading and translation, and for the assistance of students in translating the exercises. The new matter thus added amounts to an enlargement of the work by nearly eighty pages. The text of the Grammar and Exercises has also been entirely revised. The object throughout has been to assist the student in points wherein he generally finds difficulties, and no care has been spared to embody under French texts preceding the English exercises the normal application of the principles of the language. It must be half a century or more since Messrs. Lockwood first published Dr. de Fivas' classic, and its success is shown by the fact that a new edition is called for nearly every year. The revisions and additions in this new one should make it still more popular.

One of the best show-cards we have seen is that which has recently been sent out by the Julius Groos Publishing Establishment at Heidelberg in connection with their world-famous educational works on the Gaspey-Otto-Sauer methods. A very full and well-produced catalogue is also published, giving particulars of all the new and revised editions and new works.

The Bookman says: Mr. Stretch, formerly manager of the London department of Boots, Ltd., has been selected by the Times to take charge of its new venture in forming a circulating library. Mr. Stretch has been succeeded by Mr. W. J. Roberts.

'We have not, it is to be feared, had a very splendid spring in the English book trade. A member of it, who has recently been over to Paris, says that business there has been "vastly more flourishing." Next to December, May and June are the best months for the Paris publishers and booksellers. One large French house reports, however, that its turnover for May was actually larger than its turnover last December. That, at all events, is good news, and if the facts underlying it would only cross the Channel, we should not grumble at the invasion.'—Book Monthly.

Mr. W. B. Maxwell, author of 'The Ragged Messenger,' has written a novel which is likely to attract a good deal of attention. Its title is 'Vivien,' and it is the story of a girl's life, studied with a closeness that is perhaps both unusual and original. The book contains strong contrasts, with changes of scene from misery to splendour, and innumerable social types are submitted to the reader's consideration. Messrs. Methuen published the book on the 10th, and the demand has been so great that it has been necessary to print a second edition before the issue of the first.

Mr. Edward Hutton's book 'The Cities of Umbria,' which the same firm will publish in a few days, should prove welcome to the many lovers of Italy who wish for a more detailed knowledge of her saints, painters, and cities than any guide-book offers. This volume is divided into three parts, one of which deals with Umbria as Italia Mystica, the second with the Painters of the Umbrian School, and the third part with the various cities. There are twenty reproductions in colour of some water-colour drawings by Mr. A. Pisa, and there are also twelve reproductions of famous pictures in monotone.

The leading article in that admirable quarterly the American Historical Review for July is by Alfred H. Lloyd on 'History and Materialism.'

Messrs. Hodder & Stoughton have just published an important work on the 'Etchings by Van Dyck,' giving in Rembrandt photogravure, the full size of the original proofs, exact facsimiles of all the unquestioned first states. The book, edited by Walter Shaw Sparrow, contains twenty-two first states and two second states. It includes the famous unique proofs in the collections of the Duke of Devonshire and the Baron Edmond de Rothschild. The illustrations in the édition de luxe are all represented in carbon print photographs. This volume on the 'Etchings by Van Dyck' is to be followed by a similar monograph on the incomparable drawings by Ingres.

The same publishers have also issued the first volume in their 'Artists of the Present Day' series, edited by Walter Shaw Sparrow—that entitled 'In the Open Country,' the work of Lucy E. Kemp-Welch. The book contains as many as sixteen large plates in Rembrandt photogravure and four in colour, besides a Prefatory Note by Professor Hubert von Herkomer, C.V.O., R.A., and an introduction by Edward F. Strange. The second volume in this series will have for its subject the work of Frank Brangwyn, A.R.A.

Mr. John Long has just gone to press with a fourth impression of 'A Lost Cause,' by Mr. Guy Thorne.

Mr. T. Werner Laurie is publishing this month in his 'Cathedral' series the first volume on 'The Cathedrals of England and Wales.' The author is Mr. T. Francis Bumpus, whose book 'Summer Holidays among the Glories of France' has given pleasure to so wide a circle of readers.

Major Martin A. S. Hume's 'Spanish Influence on English Literature' is pretty severely dealt with in the New York Nation of July 27, in a notice of nearly five columns. The leading American critical Review charges the Major, after himself inveighing against 'Authorities and text books' for 'copying each other,' with using Mr. T. G. Underhill's 'Spanish Literature in the England of the Tudors' pretty freely without acknowledgment, and gives parallel passages in proof of its charge. We hope Major Hume will be able to prove his keen American critic is mistaken.

George Bancroft, the historian, was among the very first American students to go to Germany to complete his education. He was preceded only by Edward Everett, and one or two others. Graduating at Harvard College in 1817, when only seventeen years of age, the next year he went to Goettingen. From that time until his death he was acquainted with the leading men in Europe and America while student, diplomat, and historian. Scribner's Magazine will publish a selection from the Letters and Diaries of this remarkable man, beginning in the September number, in which an account appears of his conversations with Goethe. M. A. De Wolfe Howe will edit the series.

Dwight L. Elmendorf, the traveller and lecturer, last year made a remarkable journey along the edge of the desert in North Africa. In the September Scribner's he will describe the ancient and little-known Roman ruins of that region and illustrate them from his brilliant photographs. Mr. Elmendorf is now in Norway.

One of the latest recruits to the admittedly rather thin ranks of 'booky' booksellers is making a bid for notice under the ægis of Mr. T. Werner Laurie. His name is W. J. Roberts and his book is entitled 'Literary Landmarks of Torquay,' a subject which, we understand, he is particularly well able to deal with. Mr. Roberts spent eight and a half years of his business career in the well-known house of 'Iredale's'—the very hub of literary Torquay—and there met many of the literary notables of whom he speaks.

Torquay is rich in literary associations—Tennyson, Ruskin, Mrs. Browning, Kingsley, Lord Lytton, W. E. Norris, Eden Phillpotts, Miss Drury, Miss Peard, and Miss Coleridge, to name a few, having been connected with the town.

Mr. Roberts has used his camera to good effect, for he has photographed the houses in which these celebrities have lived; these pictures, of which there are twenty-two, and a sketch-map make the volume a complete and handy historical and literary guide and handbook.

Messrs. Bemrose & Sons, Ltd., of London and Derby, publish a new and enlarged edition of their most useful 'Memory Work for all Standards.' This little Scholar's Companion is published at one penny, or in limp cloth at twopence, and is now in its 625th thousand—so it is fair to say that at least half a million people have discovered its value, and it would be a good thing if the rest of the English people did the same. Its exercises in memory work cover nearly a score of subjects, and there are a few patterns of letters for marking linen, for maps, and for samplers. The same publishers send us an illustrated booklet by Kate E. Styan on 'The Uses and Wonders of Plant Hairs,' a really admirable little work, from which we learn that one of the uses of hairs on plants is to keep off insects, and that cultivated plants which lose much of their natural hairy protection become an easy prey to aphis pests.

Under the title 'Charles, Duke of Brunswick, an Historical Paradox,' Mr. W. Fitzhugh Whitehead will publish shortly, through Mr. Elliot Stock, an account of a mysterious episode leading up to the Franco-German War.

For the casual reader who takes any sort of interest in engineering, Mr. T. Claxton Fidler's work 'Civil Engineering' should prove useful. It is not written in the technical language of a scientific treatise, and it is designed rather for the use of busy men. There are many illustrations, and the volume forms part of the 'Books on Business' series issued by Messrs. Methuen.

THE PHILISTINISM OF BRADFORD.

Last year Bradford opened a handsome art gallery. With the help of many prominent artists and collectors, a representative exhibition was formed of the best English painting and English furniture from the beginning of the eighteenth century to the present time, a show which in method and completeness has rarely been rivalled in the Provinces. Yet, in spite of this admirable object lesson, the Corporation has now apparently wasted its money upon pictures of the type beloved of the readers of penny magazines.—Burlington Magazine.

TEN MILLION DOLLARS FOR HIGHER EDUCATION.

Mr. Rockefeller's gift of ten millions to the higher education is, says the Nation, remarkable from many points of view. It is, of course, the largest donation ever made for general purposes, and it is admirable in that there are practically no restrictions of any kind. The only limitation is a wise one: that no sectarian colleges teaching in a sectarian way shall benefit by the fund. Excellent, too, is the fact that the gift applies to the entire United States, and not to any section. Its income, which will be perhaps $450,000, will not, of course, revolutionise our hundreds of colleges, nor lift them all, even in twenty-five years' time, out of their pressing financial difficulties. Compared to their wants, this will be only a small sum annually. But the example should lead to other similar donations for general needs, either for buildings or for running expenses or for endowment purposes; and Mr. Rockefeller himself states that there is more of his money to come. Perhaps most laudable of all is the decision to give to the General Education Board an organisation which has already demonstrated its value in the Southern educational field, and should from now on exercise a very great influence on the development of the higher education in America. The small sensation excited by so princely (as well as wise) a gift affords striking evidence of the change in the scale of values wrought by the fall in interest.

REQUIREMENTS IN ENGLISH FOR ENTRANCE TO AMERICAN COLLEGES.

It is interesting to note what are the requirements in English of the Colleges of the United States. Our contemporary, the American Publishers' Weekly, in giving the following list, says the Colleges have practically uniform entrance requirements, and that those for 1905 to 1911 call for the following books:—

College Entrance English. — The Colleges of the United States have practically uniform entrance requirements in English. The requirements for the years 1905 to 1911 call for the following books: Arnold's Sohrab and Rustum; Bacon's Essays; Blackmore's Lorna Doone; Browning's Cavalier Tunes, The Lost Leader, How They Brought the Good News from Ghent to Aix, Evelyn Hope, Home Thoughts from Abroad, Home Thoughts from the Sea, Incident of the French Camp, The Boy and the Angel, One Word More, Hervé Riel; Bunyan's The Pilgrim's Progress, Part I.; Burke's Speech on Conciliation with America, or Washington's Farewell Address, and Webster's First Bunker Hill Oration; Byron's Mazeppa and the Prisoner of Chillon; Carlyle's Essay on Burns; Carlyle's Hero and Hero Worship; Chaucer's Prologue; Coleridge's The Ancient Mariner; De Quincey's Joan of Arc and The English Mail Coach; Dickens's A Tale of Two Cities; Eliot's (George) Silas Marner; Emerson's Essays (selected); Franklin's Autoibography; Gaskell's (Mrs.) Cranford; Goldsmith's The Deserted Village; Goldsmith's The Vicar of Wakefield; Hawthorne's The House of the Seven Gables; Irving's Sketch Book; Lamb's Essays of Elia; Longfellow's The Courtship of Miles Standish; Lowell's The Vision of Sir Launfal; Macaulay's Essay on Addison; Macaulay's Lays of Ancient Rome; Macaulay's Life of Johnson; Milton's Lycidas, Comus, L'Allegro, Il Penseroso; Milton's Minor Poems; Palgrave's Golden Treasury (First Series), Books II., III., and IV.; Poe's Poems; Pope's The Rape of the Lock; ger de Coverley Papers; Ruskin's Sesame and Lilies; Scott's Ivanhoe; Scott's The Lady of the Lake; Scott's Quentin Durward; Shakespeare's As You Like It; Shakespeare's Julius Cæsar; Shakespeare's Macbeth; Shakespeare's Merchant of Venice; Shakespeare's Twelfth Night; Spenser's Faerie Queene (Selections from); Tennyson's Gareth and Lynette, Launcelot and Elaine, The Passing of Arthur; Thackeray's Henry Esmond.

It will be seen that out of some forty authors all are English except about half-a-dozen. Can the Publishers' Weekly give us a rough idea how many copies of the books mentioned will be in demand in consequence of being on this requirement list?

A 'JAPAN YEAR-BOOK.'

Messrs. Takenob & Taketa, of No. 31 Kobikicho Kuchome, Tsukiji, Tokyo, Japan, send us the following particulars of what should be a very useful work. They say: 'Now that the world, bewildered and perplexed by the brilliant achievements she has attained since the outbreak of the war, are more eager than ever to study Japan, it is high time to put into execution the idea we have long entertained of publishing a "Japan Year-Book" in English somewhat after the well-known almanacs and year-books published in Europe and America, as "Whitaker's" and the "World's Almanacs" or the "Daily Mail Year Book," for this kind of reference books about Japan has been a great desideratum, and its absence has subjected foreigners to serious inconvenience. With this end in view we are at this moment engaged in publishing the first year edition of a "Japan Year-Book." It is as comprehensive as possible in range of subjects, and all the data and facts of importance and interest, instructive or amusing, find a suitable place in it. The skeleton list appended below will speak for itself. We do not doubt that our work will be welcome to the general public, nor need we call their attention to an excellent opportunity which our Year-book supplies for purpose of advertisement.'

Skeleton List of the 'Japan Year-Book': (1) Geography; (2) Population; (3) Imperial Court (Imperial Family Law); (4) Politics (Constitution, Political Situation, Political Parties, Cabinet Changes, Central and Local Government, Self-government System, &c.); (5) Army and the Navy; (6) Finance; (7) Education; (8) Religions; (9) Justice, Prisons, Police and Sanitation; (10) Agriculture, Forestry, Mining, Fishery; (11) Manufacture; (12) Patents, Trade-marks, and Designs; (13) Foreign Trade (with paragraphs about leading export and import merchants); (14) Tariff System and Rates; (15) Commerce and Mercantile establishments; (16) Banks and Money Market (with paragraphs about leading Japanese and foreign banks); (17) Mercantile Marine (with paragraphs about leading steamship establishments); (18) Overland Transportation (with paragraphs about leading railways); (19) Post and Telegraphs; (20) Diplomacy; (21) Peers; (22) Contemporary Worthies (about 500 persons representing all classes of society); (23) Press; (24) Hokkaido, Formosa, and Korea.

350 crown pages, cloth. Price—2 yen (1 gold dollar); postage abroad, 16 sen (8 cents).

A FIRST FRENCH SONG BOOK.

Messrs. A. & C. Black have published a handy little First French Song Book, arranged with airs and tonic sol-fa, by R. B. Morgan, of the Whitgift School, Croydon, with notes by the general editor of Messrs. Black's 'Modern Language Series,' Mr. F. B. Kirkman, B.A. Here is a verse from 'Le bon roi Dagobert,' showing the danger of giving good advice to kings:

> Le bon roi Dagobert
> Le grand Saint Éloi
> Lui dit: 'O mon roi,
> Il faut du savon
> Pour votre menton.'
> —C'est vrai, lui dit le roi;
> As-tu deux sous? prète-les-moi.

The little selection will be as welcome for home as for school use.

WHERE THE SUN SETS.*

The author of this remarkable book says in his preface that he belongs to a 'Coterie of Wanderers' who make it a point to foregather in London during the month of May—that is, as many of them as happen to be in England at that festive season. One of the rules of the Coterie is that a candidate, before he can join it, must have spent at least a fifth of his life abroad. At their reunions they are expected to recount any striking adventures in which they have taken part, the only condition being that a contribution be edifying as well as entertaining, and that in its main points it must be true. The present volume is the result of notes taken at the meetings by the author.

The author has managed to convey an air of mystery, both as to the existence at all of this 'Coterie of Wanderers' as well as of the stories they tell; but one must assume that the nine stories contained in this volume are all true, with a truthfulness perhaps somewhat intensified, 'as a painter lightens or darkens his colours without in the least changing the truth of the scene he portrays.' A fair example of the quality of the whole of the stories may be found in the one entitled 'Mark Wynyard's Story.' The teller of this tale meets with his friend Mark, after a separation of ten years, under singular circumstances. He had by chance wandered into a Melbourne law court while a trial was going on; it was that of Mark Wynyard, who had pleaded guilty of murder. The author is terribly shocked at this discovery; he seeks an interview, and in the brief interval 'between the saddle and the ground' as it were—that is, in the few hours left him till the expiation of his crime on the gallows—Mark tells the whole story of his life and adventures during those ten years. The story occupies 140 pages of the book, and is very interesting. Ten years previously he had married Mary Hawkins. At the wedding breakfast she had passed him to change her wedding gown for a travelling costume, and that was the last time he ever saw her. She had eloped that morning with Laurence Percival, and it was into Percival's heart that Mark had plunged the dagger, for which he was now about to suffer. In the course of his wanderings Mark is lost in the Andes, in a kind of cul de sac out of which there is no way to be found, till after many days he discovers a crevice in the apparently solid rock, which proves to be the opening through the mountain of a subterranean passage, in which he wanders for many days, until he succumbs from exhaustion. When he awakes, he finds himself 'lying luxuriously on a bed in a curiously furnished room, in the wonderful valley of Auracaca, and among a people, the handsomest, the gentlest, and the most virtuous' he had ever met. The valley is situated in the heart of the most inaccessible peaks of the Andes within the tropics, but the adventurer had no means of locating its exact position. In this valley he dwelt for six years, and he gives a pleasant account of the people he found there—a remnant of that very ancient nation who occupied Mexico before the Toltecs and Aztecs. In this happy valley, like that of Rasselas, was found the one prize worth living for—contentment—a valley so walled in by impassable barriers that ingress or egress by the mountains was impossible. Eventually he returns by the underground passage, and after many wanderings he reaches the climax by committing the murder for which he is now condemned to die.

The stories are all interesting, and they have this element of novelty and freshness that they for the most part describe life in the islands of the Southern Pacific. The author himself has dwelt long among these islands, from Tahiti westward to Fiji, and from Tonga northward to Hawaii; he has seen more of the native races, and understands them better than most people; he is of opinion, however, that white men never can quite understand these coloured people. 'The brown man knows,' he says, 'by some subtile sense, exactly what his friend or foe is thinking or feeling, so there is no need of expression by words'—an instinctive intuition which white races seem to have lost, if they ever possessed it. It is on this theory that the first story, 'Where the Sun Sets' rests. The book is one which from the unhackneyed freshness of the scenes it describes, as well as the pleasant style in which it is written, is sure to attract a good deal of attention. The author is a true lover of nature, and he describes the scenery of the islands and the curious manners and customs of the natives in simple, plain language, which has always an air of poetry running through it. His comparisons of the simplicity and innocent lives of the natives before they were contaminated by so-called civilisation are always scornfully in favour of the native races.

A NEW FRENCH GRAMMAR.

Mr. William R. Jenkins, of 852 Sixth Avenue, New York, who is described as 'Editeur et Libraire Français,' sends us a new work in his 'French Text Book Series,' entitled 'Simple Grammaire Française,' by Paul Bercy and Georges Castegnier.

Several advantages are claimed for this work:

First, that it is in French; the difficult words and sentences are translated into English and placed in parentheses.

Second, the rules and exceptions are based upon the 'Reform of the Syntax,' in accordance with the decree of the Minister of Public Instruction. The eliminated difficulties tend to make the study of the language much easier, thus saving the student time and work.

Third, the English exercises to be translated into French are invaluable. The use of a grammar entirely in French does not answer all requirements. The pupils soon get accustomed to filling in the blank spaces, to adding 's,' 'x,' and so on, but seldom reason, except when very much advanced in the study of the language. An English exercise to be written into French compels the pupils to think, and they acquire the habit of expressing themselves in French. Many pupils who have studied from grammars altogether in French fail completely in the work of translation.

Fourth, the 'Questionnaire' will be of great assistance both to teachers and pupils; it can be used for conversation, as the questions and the answers are written in simple form; aim has been made to avoid pedagogy. Special stress is laid upon the new system here given concerning the four 'e,' 'é,' 'è,' 'ê.' French grammars, written for French people, are usually constant stumbling blocks to foreigners. The expressions e mute, e opened, &c., mean nothing, but lead the student astray. In this grammar these letters, from the start, are given their individual sound. The student is also warned against the misleading expression of aspirated h.

Fifth, the chapter on the distinction between masculine and feminine nouns will be much appreciated, as much aid is not to be found in French grammars printed in French.

The book is well printed in good readable type.

THE IMPORTANCE OF EDUCATION IN PRINTING.

Mr. J. Horace McFarland discusses in the Printing Art for June the 'Importance of Education in Printing.' He finds it remarkable that, while other branches of technology are studied in schools and special institutions, printing has not received due recognition as a subject for instruction. The result is, he says, that, 'with a highly intelligent body of master-printers in America, there are but few who are in any sense fully trained in the art they practise. Very few of us know any history of our ancient art; a few more know, through power of absorption by contact, and not through intelligent study of a body of collected information, its underlying principles.' Mr. McFarland wants to see a School of the Graphic Arts established, where the prospective printer may learn both the history and the practice of his art, and, besides, the relation of printing to other arts and sciences, the processes of engraving and lithography, as well as type-making and type-setting. Photography is an art with which a printer must be familiar; electricity is becoming more and more a factor in printing, and its laws should be clearly understood. Nor should the economics of printing be neglected. 'To trace the influence of printing with movable types on the world's history will add charm and dignity to the art—and it needs both.'—The Nation.

CANADA AND THE IMPERIAL COPYRIGHT ACT.

A cable has been received from London advising that the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council has affirmed the judgment of the Supreme Court of Canada in the case of Adam and Charles Black v. The Imperial Book Company.

The case involved the British copyright in the 'Encyclopædia Britannica.' Messrs. A. & C. Black, of Edinburgh, are the owners of the Imperial copyright in this work, and brought action in Toronto to restrain the Imperial Book Company importing into Canada cheap reprints of the 'Encyclopædia.' The principal defence of the Imperial Book Company was that the British Copyright Act of 1842 is not in force in Canada.

Judge Street, who tried the case originally, held that the Imperial Acts were in force in Canada, and were unaffected by the terms of the British North America Act, which created only a local or strictly Canadian copyright, leaving unaffected the rights acquired or existing under the Imperial statute. This decision was affirmed by the Court of Appeal for Ontario, and by the Supreme Court of Canada. The Imperial Book Company applied to the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council for leave to appeal from this judgment, and the application has been refused with costs.

This decision sets at rest a contention which has frequently been made in late discussions in the press that the Imperial Act was not in force in that country.—Canadian Bookseller.

THE BIBLE AS A MODEL OF STYLE.

It will interest many people to know that Professor Charles Sears Baldwin, of Yale University, who has been described by a leading American journal as 'one of the most successful teachers of composition in the country,' publishes a little handbook, 'How to Write,' in which he deduces the doctrines of good writing entirely from the King James translation of the Bible. Professor Baldwin points out that while hitherto the importance of the Bible as a model of style has been often felt and often expressed, it has never, apparently, been realised in systematic, practical application.

'The greatest single lesson, perhaps, that the Bible teaches concerning the use of words is sincerity,' says Professor Baldwin. And again: 'For anyone who studies it from this point of view, part of the moral influence of the English Bible is strict honesty in writing, a growing sense of responsibility for the right word.' But he admits that as a model of style the Authorised Version suffers from two defects. One is the absence of paragraphing, the other the frequent use of the compound instead of the complex sentence. Of the latter defect we read:

'Compound sentences are the language of childhood; the language, that is, both of children and of early prose, such as old chronicles. Complex sentences are the language of maturity; that is, both of grown men and of modern prose. . . . Taken as a whole, the English Bible is looser in this single respect than the best modern prose.'

We should imagine that it would not be difficult to prove that no work has had such an influence on the English language generally, including style, as the Authorised Version of the Bible, containing, as it does, some of the grandest 'language' in existence.

COLONIAL HISTORY.

In the important two-volume 'History of the Colony of Victoria from its Discovery until its Absorption into the Commonwealth of Australia' (Longmans) the author, Mr. H. G. Turner, has some remarks on the payment of members of Parliament which deserve attention in this country. We think those of our readers who have discussed the subject with Australians will find that they all agree in the main with the views expressed by Mr. Turner. Payment of representatives appears invariably to do away with that sturdy independence which has been, and we hope still is, the backbone of politics in this country. Mr. Turner says:

'The general question of payment for political services has been often and vigorously discussed. As a means of securing the ablest men it has certainly not been a success. At the present rate of pay it practically invites mediocrity to make a living out of politics. To the professional or mercantile man who gives his services to the State, the amount is barely adequate to the calls upon his purse which the position entails, and in any case is of no moment. To the artisan whose revenue has been based on £3 per week, it seems to promise a career of luxuriant leisure. As a natural corollary of universal suffrage, the numerical majority, with a frank avowal of their devotion to class interests, have largely united to secure a share in this respectable emolument for the labour party. Thus, for many years there has been a certain percentage of members whose sole means of living was represented by the monthly cheque received from the Victorian Treasury. Its dire effect upon the Assembly has been towards narrower views of statesmanship and a perceptible lowering of the average of intelligence and business capacity. It has also helped to make the rank and file more docile in the hands of clever leaders, who do the thinking and talking for them, and more blindly loyal to their party, whether right or wrong. That it has a tendency to lower the dignity and independence of the position, and to foster self-seeking, has been shown by the fact that in a neighbouring colony Parliament had sunk so low that a Bill was introduced protecting the salaries of members from attachment by their creditors.'

HENRY SOTHERAN.

The promised portrait of Mr. Sotheran has not yet reached us. The following interesting notice appeared in the Athenæum last week:

'Another link with bookselling of the past was broken when on Sunday last Henry Sotheran passed away at his residence on Beulah Hill, Upper Norwood, at the age of eighty-five. His father, Thomas Sotheran, whom we remember well, was born at Ampleforth, in the vale of York, and many of the family had been booksellers in the city of York since the earlier half of the eighteenth century. Thomas Sotheran came to London, and was apprenticed to the Quaker booksellers John and Arthur Arch in Cornhill, and they had such regard for him that when he married, in 1812, they made him a present of the stationery business they had in Little Tower Street. In 1816 he founded the present bookselling firm. His son Henry was born on May 29, 1820, and received his education at the Pestalozzian School at Stockwell, but had to return home, owing to ill-health; and in 1832, when he was only twelve, he took an active part in his father's business. So rapidly did it grow that Thomas Sotheran decided to relinquish the stationery business in favour of a former employé, Mr. John Draper.

'In 1841 Thomas Sotheran took his son into partnership. In 1851 Mr. Stibbs, whose shop faced Somerset House, was retiring from business. Henry Sotheran secured this, and purchased the stock and goodwill. In 1856 Messrs. Smith & Son were removing from 136 Strand to their present premises, and Sotheran secured from them the lease of this handsome house, with its splendid frontage, for the display of books. Sotheran then entered into partnership with Mr. George Willis, the well-known bookseller, whose shop under the Piazza in Covent Garden was always a source of attraction to book-lovers—it was a bad day for sellers of books, for previously the rival firms would bid against each other, prices thus advancing considerably. The partnership lasted only ten years, and the business again became the sole property of Henry Sotheran. In 1872 the business in Piccadilly was added, and the entire building, with the exception of the top floor, was soon crowded with books. This he kept for his own use, and from the windows, with the aid of a field-glass, he could see, he has told us, his home on Beulah Hill. At the end of June, 1893, he retired from business, being succeeded by his son Henry Cecil, and Charles Buckland and Alexander Balderston Railton, both of whom predeceased him. An obituary notice of the last appeared in No. 4012.

'Although Mr. Sotheran had long retired from the firm, he took an active interest in it to the last. He will be long remembered by those who knew him for his kind, genial disposition. It was always a pleasure to meet him and to see his cheerful smile of greeting; while to business men he leaves an example of great activity and integrity.

'No record of Sotheran can be complete without reference to his enterprise in securing the copyright of the ornithological works of John Gould. For these he gave, including the plant and lithographic stones, 5,000*l.*; and he at the same time secured the services of Gould's staff of colourists, and was in this way able to complete, under the direction of Dr. Bowdler Sharpe, the works left unpublished.'

The following is an extract from a notice by a correspondent of the Times. The statement therein that Mr. Sotheran's father died in 1832 is a flat contradiction of my statement last week that I once dined with him in the sixties! I believe so still; but, alas! memory is deceptive. My statement is, however, confirmed by Mr. Cecil Sotheran, who informs me that his grandfather died in 1867 or 1868. It should also be mentioned that Mr. Willis left the firm in 1868—not 1888, as stated below.—E. M.

'Mr. Henry Sotheran was born on May 29, 1820. On the father's death in 1832 the business devolved upon his son, then a boy of twelve years of age, in course of education at the once well-known "Pestalozzian School" at Stockwell; and this boy of twelve took actual charge of the business. But he was a youth of remarkable natural aptitudes and physical and mental energy and force of character, elevated by sound religious teaching and refined by the associations of his home; and, having many family friends, his name rapidly became known as that of a most promising young man of business. In 1856 he entered into partnership with Mr. George Willis, and during the next ten years the operations of the firm were so extended in the Strand and at Charing Cross that when Mr. Willis retired in 1888 Mr. Sotheran removed the Charing Cross branch of the business to Piccadilly. His enterprise was always bold and large-handed and resolute; and the adventure in which he always took the greatest pleasure and pride was the great undertaking of the publication of the ornithological works of the late John Gould, which, after the death of the latter, was completed under the direction of Dr. Bowdler Sharpe. Mr. Henry Sotheran always maintained his keen interest in "the City," and was a past-Master of the Loriners' and the Stationers' Companies. He was compensated for the short formal education he had received by his inborn taste for literature, which he assiduously cultivated and extended by his wide and deep reading of the best English writers. He was a devout and thoroughly loyal Churchman; and one of the most pleasing reminiscences of him to the present writer is that of meeting him, after his severe illness some years ago, one morning by the Royal Exchange, when, asking him how, after his recent sickness, he happened to be in the City at so early an hour, he replied with the greatest warmth, "On receiving this morning my copy of '—— Diary,' for the coming year I found that they had not given the entries of the Sunday lessons in their usual places, and I at once drove in to the publishers to protest with indignation against the omission"; and he continued to enlarge on the matter all the way back to Piccadilly. Mr. Sotheran was not only a man of always commanding presence, but in the prime of life, "in the 'seventies," one of the two handsomest Englishmen of their day and generation, the other being the late Lord Sandhurst, when serving as Sir William Mansfield during the time of the Mutiny in India. Seen at their ease, in the abandon of social intercourse, there never were more perfectly chiselled heads, of the finest Grecian type, than those of Sir William Mansfield and Mr. Henry Sotheran. Mr. Sotheran retired from business in 1893, and was succeeded in it by his son, Mr. Cecil Sotheran, and Messrs. Charles Buckland and Alexander B. Railton, both of whom predeceased him. He married in 1860 Miss Rosetta Hunot, a lady of Huguenot descent, who more than shared his literary tastes, and who died in 1892.'

DEATH OF THE ECHO.

After a career of nearly thirty-seven years, marked by some changes and, on the whole, much prosperity, the Echo ceased yesterday to be numbered among London halfpenny evening newspapers.—Daily Mail, Aug. 9.

THE RAILWAY BOOKSTALL CONTRACTS.

THE following extracts from the Daily Mail of August 9 are important, as this Bookstall question affects the whole book trade directly or indirectly, and it is well to know what is the policy of the Daily Mail.

This time last year the newspaper world was alarmed by the rumour that the Daily Mail was about to extinguish, by means of its simultaneous publication in the provinces, most of the provincial journals. It may be remembered that we printed a number of extracts from journals who thought their position endangered. Their fear has now taken another form. Some journals—the Yorkshire Post and Sheffield Independent—have invented the idea that the Daily Mail has approached the railway companies in order to take over the bookstalls which are being offered for public competition by the London and North-Western and Great Western Railways.

Other newspapers have been issuing among themselves 'private and confidential' circulars. The printed circular sent broadcast has been held to be not 'private and confidential,' but we will for the moment spare the more nervous of these newspapers the publication of their amazing effusions.

Messrs. W. H. Smith & Son, as we pointed out yesterday, are fortifying themselves by purchasing shops in close proximity to every railway station.

It may relieve the minds of our newspaper friends to know that the 'Daily Mail' has never made any offer, either direct or indirect, for any distributing agency with regard to newspapers or periodicals.

Moreover, for obvious reasons, it will decline to sell any copies of its newspapers or other periodical publications to any firm in any way interested in the ownership of publications. Messrs. W. H. Smith have rigidly declined ownership in newspapers, and long ago gave up the publishing of books for those same obvious reasons.

We have very grave doubts if the railway companies are wise in endeavouring to supplant Messrs. W. H. Smith & Son. In the past there have been controversies between Messrs. Smith and the Daily Mail, but these do not blind the Daily Mail to the fact that Messrs. Smith & Son's work, on the whole, is very well done, and it is remarkable that a business of eighty years' standing should so quickly have adapted itself to the special trains and special telegraph system by which the Daily Mail is distributed so rapidly all over the country.

Newspaper distribution cannot possibly become in the future a monopoly. Nothing would be easier than for the Daily Mail to conduct its own distribution, as is done by more than one French newspaper. The cost of that distribution would be only a fraction more than the present system.

This fact must be taken seriously into account by those who are competing against Messrs. W. H. Smith & Son for the London and North-Western and the Great Western bookstalls.

It must, we repeat, be borne in mind that the Daily Mail and associated publications, which amount in output to fifteen millions of copies weekly, would not be supplied to any firm owning bookstalls connected with any firm interested in newspapers or periodicals.

MEDIEVAL HISTORY.

'A SOURCE Book for Medieval History,' by Professor O. J. Thatcher, of the University of Chicago, and Dr. E. H. McNeal, of Ohio State University, has just appeared, through Scribners. It gives in all 325 selections, mainly from charters rather than the chroniclers; and these apply to the period down to 1500, but with France and England omitted. The editors hope to atone soon for their omission of France by publishing a small collection relating exclusively to France.

AUCTION PRICES OF BOOKS.*

VOLUMES I. and II. of this four-volume work have reached us, and have about 1,200 pages between them. The earliest English book auction noticed here is the George Daniel sale of July 1864; the earliest American, the A. Rice sale in March 1870; the latest in both countries here noted took place in July last year. The period covered is 40 years for England and 34 for the United States. Down to 1886 in England and 1894 in America only some of the most important book sales are dealt with; but after those dates 'Auction Book Prices' is a compilation of Mr. Slater's and of the American 'Book Prices Current,' neither of which publications need to be described to the readers of the PUBLISHERS' CIRCULAR. The books recorded sold for not less than £1 in England or $1 in the States, were printed in England or in English (like Lowndes), or in America or are about America (like Joseph Sabine), or were printed before 1520. Some important foreign books printed since 1520 are included. Most seventeenth, eighteenth, and nineteenth century books, not in English and not printed in England or America, have been excluded. Most 'extra illustrated' books have very properly been excluded. The four volumes will include 100,000 records of nearly 20,000 books and editions. The entries under Bible fill 26 pages, Dante 4 pages, Bunyan not 3, Boccaccio nearly 8, Cicero nearly 6, Cervantes 4, Byron 6, Burns 4, Chaucer 5, Keats nearly 4, Dryden 4, Browning (E. B. & R.) 6, Defoe nearly 5, Dickens nearly 16, Kipling over 5, Lamb 7, Coleridge 4, Lang 4, Johnson 6½, Goldsmith 7, Fielding 3, Ainsworth 4½! Carlyle not 2, Columbus 2½, Benjamin Franklin 5, Cruikshank 5, Bewick 6, Bacon 8; Shakespeare will doubtless fill much of Vol. IV. The price of the four volumes will be eight guineas.

SKETCHES FROM THE DIARY OF A COMMERCIAL TRAVELLER OF THE MIDDLE OF LAST CENTURY.*

Introductory.

COMMERCIAL men are of consequence, also, as being indirectly instrumental in finding labour for the operative, and assistance by credit which would in many instances be refused even by a neighbour. In this they exercise a wise and salutary precaution towards the industrious middle classes throughout the width and breadth of our land; increasing the riches of the wealthy, adding magnificence to the great, and knitting mankind together as it were in a mutual intercourse of good offices; and thus, while promoting the public good, they prove themselves benefactors to the world. They form also a bulwark to the State. Their hospitable board sends forth daily from the established organ at its head one universal sentiment of loyalty to our queen; a loyalty evinced at no other table so frequently, and seldom, if ever, with more warmth and sincerity. They constitute, indeed, no mean portion of the basis upon which all the institutions of our common country rest—by the exercise of whose energies its importance and weight in the scale of nations have been created and established. By those who are aware of their actual position they are justly regarded as essential parts of the grand mechanism which regulates the prosperity of the country, and by whose motive power the vessel of the State is propelled, governed, and controlled.

The further weight and importance of the commercial body will, I am persuaded, be readily estimated from the statement that, upon fair calculation, the present lowest computation of its number, distributed throughout the kingdom, from two or three up to ten and twenty or more, in proportion to the size of a town, reaches thirty thousand; that many of its members are from home nearly the whole of their time; and that the majority may, on a fair average, be said to be absent ten months out of twelve, or three hundred out of three hundred and sixty-five days, spending their guinea, or, in round numbers, twenty shillings each, per diem. This will show no less a sum than nine millions of pounds sterling; and when to this is added the salaries of thirty thousand men, varying probably from one hundred to five hundred pounds per annum, or averaging fairly two hundred pounds each, the aggregate amount attains the enormous sum of fifteen millions sterling expended by or paid to the body of commercial travellers, an amount equal to nearly one-third of the entire home

MENTION THE 'P. C.'—Our Readers who order books, &c. they see mentioned or advertised in the PUBLISHERS' CIRCULAR will do us a great service if they will mention the fact to the Publishers and Wholesale Agents.

* Auction Prices of Books, a Representative Record in Alphabetical Order. Edited by Luther S. Livingston. Published by Elliot Stock.

revenue of the United Kingdom, and exceeding that of any single department in the State.

The wealth and importance of our nation, in a commercial point of view, cannot, indeed, be more strikingly exhibited than by showing that the bare expense of disposing of the produce and manufactures of Britain, and of its imports, reaches the immense sum above-named; what, then, must be the mass of our commercial returns when the amount (and this is not the whole expense) of placing them in their ordinary channels of consumption is so large, and yet only a trifling and very inconsiderable percentage upon the aggregate?

While forming so important and yet distinct a class of her Majesty's subjects, it redounds greatly to the credit of commercial travellers, and is especially worthy of notice here, that the more affluent have recently incorporated an institution likely, from the liberal spirit of its founders and promoters, and the energetic determination of its officers and board of management, to be second to few of its kind in the kingdom. This institution is designed to clothe, maintain, and educate the orphans of deceased, and children of necessitous commercial travellers, of both sexes, from the age of seven to the age of fourteen years, upon the enlightened and benevolent principle of including every denomination of the Christian faith.

Sufficient has been already subscribed to allow of the procuring commodious premises, with extensive grounds attached, delightfully situated on the borders of Epping Forest, in the township of Wanstead, distant about six miles, and easy of access from the Metropolis.

The asylum is now complete in all its arrangements, admirably adapted to its purpose, healthful in situation, sufficiently large to accommodate two hundred children, and capable of considerable extension. It has already twenty inmates enjoying the advantages of the institution, with a declaration of a second intended election of children eligible on December 28 of the current year, 1847.

After long and anxious, yet pleasurable toil, the founders, having arrived at the present gratifying point, look forward (aided by the assistance of the commercial body, and the benevolent public at large) with great satisfaction to the period when the institution shall supply the place of parent and protector to a large number of children, who otherwise would be cast upon the world fatherless, friendless, without education, or a comfortable home, or any cheering prospect for the future. No qualification is required but distress and necessity, and no part of the United Kingdom, no sect in the land, is excluded from participating in its benefits.

Since, then, 'we cannot tell what a day may bring forth'—what dark spots may yet fall upon our horizon—check our present apparent prosperity, obscure our plans and arrangements for the future—or how soon we may individually be withdrawn from the world and its moral obligations—it is wise, while in the possession of health and the opportunity, to make some provision for our survivors; and, so far as within our ability may lie, to contribute towards the comfort of those who have a claim upon us, not only by the ties of kindred, but by the bond of social brotherhood and good fellowship, as workers together in the same great cause of mercantile advancement. That the directors will not appeal in vain to the sympathies and liberality of commercial men, for their kind co-operation and contributions towards the accomplishment of so commendable and desirable an object, all past experience has fully proved.

TRADE CHANGES.

MESSRS. A. H. & E. H. HANCE, dating from 23 Ludgate Hill, E.C., inform us that 'the businesses of the late Mr. John F. Dunn, which have been carried on by us as his executors at 23 Ludgate Hill and 308 High Holborn, will, on August 17 next, be transferred to Mr. Sydney E. Dunn, a son of the said John F. Dunn, who will pay all outstanding liabilities, and be solely responsible in the future for all debts and liabilities contracted by the firm. All liability in respect of the said businesses will cease as from August 16, 1905. All accounts owing to us at that date will be received by Mr. Sydney E. Dunn, and your future favours on his behalf will be esteemed.'

Messrs. Shyamacharan Keroba & Bros., booksellers, Bombay, ask us to say they have just commenced business at Sitaram Buildings, Fort, Bombay.

Messrs. W. & R. Holmes, wholesale booksellers and stationers, Glasgow, have now removed their Educational School Furniture and Kindergarten Departments and Counting House from 51 Argyle Street, to 3, 5, and 11 Dunlop Street, where they have acquired a large extension of premises, their warehouse there now occupying five extensive floors. The second-hand book department, hitherto conducted at 35 and 37 St. Enoch Square, has also been removed to Dunlop Street (second floor). For the convenience of customers a passenger elevator is in course of construction, giving easy access to all the departments.

Heyer, M.A.; Masson—Les Enfants Célèbres, Louis Barbé; Mérimée—Le Siège de la Rochelle, J. E. Michell, M.A.; Nerval—La main enchantée, edited by H. H. Horton, B.A.; Vigny—Glimpses of Napoleon, W. H. Hill, M.A.; Voltaire—Le Blanc et le Noir, H. H. Horton, B.A.

Little German Classics.—The following volumes are now added: Zschokke—Der Zerbrochene Krug, W. Osborne Brigstocke; Fouqué—Sintram, Fräulein Pittis; Grimm—Die Zwei Brüder, A. R. H. Moncrieff; Körner—Der Vetter aus Bremen, C. H. Clarke; Schmid—Die Ostereier, A. R. H. Moncrieff.

Blackie's Model Readers.—Literature, Art, Music: Coloured Pictures, Songs with Music, Composition, Phonetics, in six books.

The English Counties (A New Series of Readers).—Upper Thames Counties; Birmingham and the Midlands; Cumberland, Westmorland, and Furness; Lancashire; Surrey.

Blackie's Story-book Readers.—The highly favourable reception of the Picture-Story Readers for Infants has encouraged the publishers to develop the fundamental idea of that series by issuing a series of little stories for Standards I., II., III., and IV., brightly written, suitable in language for the respective standard, and nicely illustrated. The books are issued in neat paper covers. Thirteen are ready.

New Recitation Books, by Margaret Riach, LL.A.—Recitation for Infants (five books); Recitations for Juniors (four books); Recitations for Seniors (six books).

Blackie's New Concentric Arithmetics.—In three books.

A Complete Course of Free-arm and Industrial Drawing, by J. W. Topham Vinall, A.R.C.A. (Lond.). A series of charts in coloured crayon on dark ground for blackboard and free-arm work, with full directive and descriptive text.

The Red Letter Shakespeare, edited by Edmund K. Chambers.—The Merchant of Vence; A Midsummer-Night's Dream; The Tempest; Romeo and Juliet; King Richard the Third; The Taming of the Shrew; Much Ado about Nothing; King Henry the Fifth; Two Gentlemen of Verona.

William Blackwood & Sons.

Messrs. William Blackwood & Sons have just completed their excellent new series of Readers entitled 'The Story of the World,' by the publication of the two volumes of 'The World's Childhood,' suitable for Standards I. and II. These are clearly printed in large type and are very fully illustrated with excellent drawings done by Mr. Brinsley Le Fanu. 'The Story of the World' consists of five books, adjusted to meet the requirements of Standards III. to VII., and has met with very great appreciation, and is being adopted by the London County Council Education Committee.

'The Peace of Aristophanes,' edited with Introduction, Critical Notes and Commentary, by H. Sharpley, M.A., late Scholar of Corpus Christi College, Oxford; 'A German Reader for Technical Schools,' by E. F. Seckler; 'A German Conversational Grammar, Reader, and Writer,' by Louis Lubovius.

New Editions.—'An Introductory Text Book of Logic,' by S. H. Mellone, M.A. London, D.Sc. Edinburgh; 'Stormonth's English Dictionary,' also handy School Edition.

Messrs. Cassell & Co.

To their educational list has just been added a remarkably cheap series of 'Fairy Tale Readers' under the title of 'Cassell's Fairy Tale Series,' in five books. Each book contains four striking coloured plates, with illustrations in the text. The works have been prepared for press by the popular author of 'Micky Magee's Menagerie' and many other books for children, in consultation with a practical teacher of wide experience. The books give a charming selection of well-edited fairy stories which, collectively, form a little library of great interest. The books are written in a simple and attractive manner, and are carefully graduated for the various standards. Each book is divided into paragraphs of suitable length, and in the earlier works of the series these are numbered. The books are uniform in size and general appearance with the publishers' popular Nature Study Readers, entitled Cassell's 'Eyes and No Eyes' series, by Arabella Buckley, which are having an enormous circulation and are the recognised favourites for Nature Study. The books in this series are being reprinted again and again to meet the continued demand. As in the case of the 'Eyes and no Eyes' series, the five books of fairy tales will be issued complete in one volume as a prize and gift-book. Messrs. Cassell & Co. have in preparation a set of pictures for wall decoration and Nature Study, which will appear shortly under the title of Cassell's 'Wild Birds' sheets, selected and edited by R. Kearton, F.Z.S. There will be six sheets in all, each containing eight beautiful reproductions in colours of familiar wild birds; and, like the 'Familiar Wild Flowers' sheets, which have met with a very cordial reception, they will be issued mounted on board, with cord suspender and varnished. They will also be obtainable unmounted suitable for framing. The same publishers have issued a very cheap and useful book of 'Cookery Recipes for School and Home,' by Lizzie Heritage (first-class diploma in cookery and domestic economy, Society of Arts). It is eminently suited to learners in the culinary art, and for use in homes where economy is desirable. Every recipe is the result of painstaking, careful experiment. 'The why and the wherefore' of every branch of the subject is so simplified that any teacher could work out and explain the recipes. Three hundred and sixty-seven thousand copies have now been issued of that popular school-book 'The Citizen Reader,' by the Right Hon. H. O. Arnold Foster, M.A., M.P., and the entirely new edition recently issued, with new illustrations, is having an increasing sale. Over 200,000 copies of the same author's history readers, entitled 'Things New and Old,' have been called for; while his 'History of England' has been recently reprinted. Among other reprints this year of notable works may be mentioned 'The Laws of Everyday Life,' 'Cassell's Æsop's Fables' in words of one syllable, and their famous dictionaries—French, German, and Latin. Dr. Parkin's well-known geographical reader, 'Round the Empire,' is meeting with an increasing attention, and has attained a sale of 133,000 copies.

Church of England Temperance Society.

with an Introduction and Notes by W. Langbridge; Coleridge's Ancient Mariner, with an Introduction and Notes by R. McWilliam.

Messrs. T. C. & E. C. Jack.

Messrs. T. C. & E. C. Jack have completed their translation and adaptation of Horsmann & Schmidt's French by the Droit Method, which consists of Parts I., II., III. and IV., each part being a year's work. Part IV. is made up of two books—namely, a 'Livre de Lecture' and a 'Livre d'Exercise.' A 'Grammaire française en français' has also been issued, and is intended to be used in connection with each of the four parts of the course. The Droit Method, judging from the welcome accorded to the earlier volumes of this course, has at length gripped the teachers of Great Britain. The Board of Education has suggested the division of the year's course of Arithmetic into three terms. This suggestion has been anticipated in Messrs. Jack's Three Term Arithmetic, which has just been issued, and which consists of seven books, each divided into three terms, with examinations at the end of each term.

The Round the World Geographical Readers have been completed by the addition of Our Colonial Cousins and The World.

Jack's Concentric Histories have also been completed by the issue of British History as Cause and Effect and The Making of Britain. The History of Europe is also now ready for issue. Companion Booklets to these Geographicals are also in course of preparation, those referring to England and to Australasia having already been issued. The first Native Study Reader—namely, Book III. of the 'Book about You' series—is another new issue, and the remainder of the volumes of this series are well in hand, and will be on sale shortly.

Revision Grammar, Intermediate Arithmetic, Graphs of Algebraical Functions, Three Term Algebra are other new issues, as is also the Reading Sheets prepared in conjunction with the 'Steps in Learning to Read,' which have secured so much of the favour of the teachers of the Empire.

METHOD GASPEY-OTTO-SAUER for the LEARNING of MODERN LANGUAGES

The advantage which this Method has over all others is its combination of theory and practice, i.e. a clear scientific exposition of the Grammar, combined with practical conversational exercises. By strictly adhering to this Method the great difficulty of enabling the pupil to speak and write foreign languages has been successfully solved for the first time. The New Editions have been improved and kept up to date.

TISSOT'S OLD TESTAMENT.

IN TWO VOLUMES.

Large 4to. cloth extra, £6 6s. net.

NOTE.—Following on the extraordinary success obtained by the publication of 'THE LIFE OF OUR LORD JESUS CHRIST,' M. Tissot desired, as the crowning work of his life, to add to the 'New Testament" Illustrations a series on the 'Old Testament,' and in this manner to supply illustrations which cover the whole period of the Bible history. This work, of surpassing interest to all students of the Bible story, contains nearly Four Hundred illustrations from M. J. James Tissot's original drawings. A large proportion of these are faithful reproductions in colour from the original drawings. The letterpress is in English only.

'M. Tissot's scheme of colour, with its bright, barbarous touches in raiment and furniture, is no less telling than the accomplishment of his drawing.'—Scotsman.

'There are few men of modern times who have so well depicted the deep and solemn purport of the Bible story.'—Pall Mall Gazette.

Junior German Grammar Examination Papers, by A. Voegelin, M.A.; Junior Geography Examination Papers, by W. G. Baker, M.A.

Mr. Murray.

A Primer of Logic, by Miss Constance Jones; Recent Development in Biological Science, by W. B. Hardy, F.R.S.; Elementary Greek Grammar, by John Thompson, M.A., late Scholar of Christ's College, Cambridge, Senior Classical Master, High School, Dublin; Revised Edition of Initia Græca, Part I., A First Greek Course, containing Grammar, Delectus, Exercise Book, and Vocabularies, carefully revised and simplified, special attention being given to the Attic Forms; On Translating Homer, by Matthew Arnold, new edition, with Introduction and Notes by W. H. D. Rouse, M.A., Litt.D., Head Master of Perse Grammar School, Cambridge; Intermediate Mechanics, by A. W. Porter, B.Sc.

Thomas Nelson & Sons.

Nelson's Junior Supplementary Readers for the Lower Classes.—These books are designed to meet the growing demand for a wider range of reading and a more continuous treatment of subjects than is possible in the ordinary class readers. They bridge over the gap between Nelson's Infant Supplementary Readers and Nelson's Supplementary Readers for the Upper Classes. They have been specially edited for the various classes to which they are assigned, and the publishers are confident that they will be appreciated by teachers and enjoyed by pupils. All the books of the series are well illustrated in full colour and in black and white. List of the series: For the old Standard II., Stories from Grimm (two books); for the old Standard III., All the Year Round in Our Village, Part 1, January-June; Part 2, July-December; 'The Infant School, its Principles and Methods,' by J. Gunn, M.A., D.Sc.

Nelson's Royal Wall Atlas.—No. VIII. The World. Messrs. Thomas Nelson & Sons beg to call attention to the issue of a new wall Atlas in their well-known series of Royal Wall Atlases. This series, which has been much imitated, yet remains unequalled for cheapness, clearness, and suitability for school work. The new Atlas of the World consists of a series of eleven physical and political Maps of the continents, 34 by 38 inches, printed in colours on strong Manilla paper and attached to one roller to turn over. List of Maps: The World, showing British Possessions; Europe, Physical, Political; Asia, Physical, Political; Africa, Physical, Political; America, Physical; North America, Political; South America, Political; Australasia.

'Nature Studies and Fairy Tales for Infant School s and Lower Classes,' by Catherine I. Dodd.

Royal School Series.—Stages 1, 2, 3, and 4, with Handbooks, have been adopted by the London County Council Education Department. Stage 5, Nelson's New Drawing Course, by J. Vaughan; ten sheets printed on both sides—one side outline, the other in colour; size 20 by 25 inches, on stout cards in strong cloth portfolio. The course provides a complete series of examples in (a) outline drawing from nature and objects; (b) brush drawing from nature, with adaptations to pattern; (c) clay modelling; (d) mechanical drawing; (e) cardboard modelling. Absolutely nothing else is needed in the way of charts or books. The series covers all work that is usually done in primary schools.

Notices of Books

From Messrs. Adam & Charles Black.—'La Première Année de Français: a Day in Paris,' written and edited by F. B. Kirkman, B.A. From the Preface to this volume we gather that the text has been prepared with a threefold object: firstly, to familiarise pupils with terms in common use, more especially such as relate to their everyday interests; secondly, to form the basis of a thorough and graduated course of instruction in the elements of grammar; and, thirdly, to afford the reader some knowledge of life in France. The narrator describes a day passed by an English boy, one 'Jean Bull,' in a French family at Paris. The book is a considerable advance on the old method of teaching the language, and a certain amount of brightness and originality is introduced into the conversational passages—even those relating to the mustard and the pepper and the relationship of one's aunt—which is very acceptable. The illustrations, too, are a distinct and commendable feature of the production. It is issued either with or without vocabulary.

From Messrs. George Bell & Sons.—'A First Algebra,' by W. M. Baker, M.A., and A. A. Bourne, M.A. The chief advantages of this manual as claimed by the authors are that the connection of the subject with arithmetic and geometry is emphasised; that negative quantities are explained at a very early stage, and illustrated by easy examples; that simple equations and easy problems are placed in the forefront of the book, and the steps in the solution of equations are shown to be not arbitrary performances, but direct applications of axioms; that multiplication and division by polynomials are deferred until after simultaneous equations of the first degree have been treated; that the use of squared paper for approximate results, for statistics, and various graphs is fully explained in the text and illustrated by examples. There are also numerous oral exercises and revision papers. It will thus be seen that the arrangement of the book, which in educational manuals of the mathematical order constitutes the main direction in which improvement can be introduced, has been capably looked after; and we can ourselves testify that such accessories to thorough efficiency as clear printing, suitable paper, and strong binding have received every attention.

From Messrs. Burns & Oates, Ltd.—'Drawings from Models and Objects: a Handbook for Teachers and Students in Training,' by John Carroll. We may direct attention to two prominent lines of treatment in this manual. One is that the lessons are arranged in the order of difficulty, the more simple objects being taken first, and these gradually extended to subjects presenting greater obstacles of execution; while the other feature is the arrangement of groups of three or four objects in various positions with respect to each other and to the eye of the spectator. The book, we understand, has been mainly prepared with the purpose of assisting young or inexperienced teachers of drawing and for students in training colleges. For such a class its clear, simple, and practical teaching should render it particularly well adapted.

From the Church of England Temperance Society, 4 Sanctuary, Westminster, S.W.—'A First Reader in Health and Temperance,' by W. Taylor. First impressions count for much, both in our judgment of books and human beings, and as a rule if we relied upon them we should not go far wrong. Our first impression of Mr. Taylor's manual is that it is written in a frank, straightforward, homely fashion that is likely to have great weight with young people. Here, in other words, is an instructor who is at one with them, who does not put on lofty magisterial airs, but addresses them in language which they can clearly understand and appreciate. Our next impression is that the teaching is excellent, well-grounded, and of a most wholesome description. It concerns matters of personal health which cannot be too early impressed upon the youthful community. Occasionally the anti-alcoholic argument is a little too strongly emphasised, but the book as a whole is surprisingly free from bias. In addition to the recommendations we have mentioned, there are characteristics of arrangement, good printing, and numerous illustration which render the work of exceptional value to the school teacher.

From Messrs. William Collins, Sons & Co., Ltd.—'Collins' Wide World Geography Reader, Book X.,' is devoted to the subject of 'Europe,' and, in addition to the merit of suitable text, possesses the recommendation of large clear type, a profusion of brightly-coloured illustrations, and numerous well-designed maps. At the end of the volume is a useful geographical summary. 'The Story of Britain on the Concentric Plan, Book VI.,' from the same publishers, is characterised by similar attributes as the previous work, and is gaily decorated with both plain and coloured pictures, maps, &c. The book is intended for senior readers, and the text has been specially prepared by the Rev. Edgar Sanderson, M.A. It contains a complete history of Great Britain and Ireland from 55 B.C. to the present day.

From Mr. C. W. Daniel.—'Fables and Things Fabulous,' by John Hynde Cotton. In the fifty fables of this volume, collected from various ancient sources, the reader will find much that is amusing, while the moral in each case conveyed will well repay reflection.

From Messrs. J. M. Dent & Co.—'St. Catherine of Siena as seen in her Letters.' Translated and edited with introduction by Vida D. Scudder. Catherine Benincasa, a dyer's daughter, was born twenty-six years after Dante's death. Among the men of her era were Cola di Rienzo, eloquent Tribune of Rome, Edward III. of England, who won the battle of Poictiers when she was nine; Villani the historian, Boccaccio the story-teller, Petrarch the poet, Wycliffe who Englished the Bible, Huss, Sir John Hawkwood the best General of the Middle Ages. Probably this young woman of the people made more difference to the world of her time than any one of them, and exercises more influence at the present day. The godly go to her letters for spiritual consolation and common-sense advice; and decadent writers like D'Annunzio study her works to increase their vocabulary of homely Italian words. In the four volumes of 'Le Lettere di S. Caterina,' edited by N. Tommaseo, are 373 letters, of which 73 are translated in Vida D. Scudder's book. We have read Miss—or is it Mrs. ?—Scudder's volume through, and have compared the English of twenty-four of the letters with the Italian original. The translation is very well done, is clear and idiomatic. Almost the only real error is on pages 120 and 117, where 'parenti' (relatives) is translated 'parents.' Pope Gregory XI. is counselled not to give 'exaltation in things spiritual' to friends or relatives, but only to virtue. A Pope's 'parents' are rarely alive, and just before this letter reached him Gregory XI. had made three of his relatives cardinals. On page 221 'parenti' is correctly rendered 'relatives.' On page 163 'provisions the rock of the soul' should be 'provisions the fortress of the soul,' for 'rocca' does not mean 'rock.' On page 126 'God throws the book of love at him' should be 'casts the hook of love to him' ('l'amo dell' amore'), but the 'b' must be a printer's error, as 'amo' is translated 'hook' on page 164. On the same page twenty-three words are very properly left untranslated, but should not the omission have been indicated by dots? Not only is the translation a very good one and the selection representative and characteristic and interpretive, but the editor's twenty-four pages at the beginning of the book and short introductions to some of the letters are interesting and helpful to the understanding of the career and character of this most worthy and wonderful of women. She was a real saint and a genuine genius, with a talent for politics. She was a mystic and saw marvellous visions, yet what is most striking in many of her letters is her practical common-sense. Among her correspondents were popes, kings, queens, statesmen, cardinals, warriors (including English Hawkwood, the freelance), bishops, friars, hermits, nuns, tailors' wives, little schoolgirls. To all she wrote with wonderful tact and fearless candour. Her favourite topic was the love man owes to God and God gives to man. Nails could not hold the God-man to the cross had love not kept Him there.

From Mr. Henry Frowde we have received two capital editions, at a popular price, of Charles and Mary Lamb's 'Tales from Shakespeare,' with sixteen illustrations selected from the Boydell engravings; and the Brothers Grimm's collection of fanciful stories, which we may be sure will always have a powerful attraction for the young and imaginative. The last-named is a reprint of the first English edition, and contains twenty-two illustrations by George Cruikshank.

From the Homeland Association, Ltd., 22 Bride Lane, E.C. — 'The Homeland Readers: Surrey' (Book 1), by M. T. Yates, LL.D. In their work of extending a knowledge of English county history, geography, traditions, antiquities, industries, and so forth, the Homeland Association are advancing their borders. The present volume is the first of a series of School Readers dealing with county areas, the object being to encourage local patriotism and to instruct pupils in what they often know so little about—their own country. It is proposed, we understand, to issue two volumes on each county, the first or junior book for children under ten years of age, containing only simple details, while the second or senior book shall be as comprehensive and exhaustive as space will permit of. The volume now under consideration is the junior book on Surrey. It presents many excellent features, the information being brightly and attractively set forth, the print large and distinct, and the illustrations, for the most part, above the average of similar books. Should the Homeland Association in their School Readers maintain the high standard set by the opening volume they may confidently be assured of a wide success.

From Messrs. T. C. & E. C. Jack.—'Meteorology, or Weather Explained,' by J. G. McPherson, Ph.D., F.R.S.E. The subject is treated after a popular fashion, due regard being paid to accuracy of information. Practically, Dr. McPherson is only the mouthpiece through which the results of other workers' researches are conveyed. Notably the papers of Dr. John Aitken, F.R.S., in the 'Transactions of the Royal Society of Edinburgh,' are laid under contribution. However, the author has performed his task of popularising the subject very cleverly, and no little of the success achieved is due to his light, buoyant method of explanation. Another work in the same series—'Jack's Scientific Series'—is 'English Local Government,' by Percy Ashley, M.A., which, like the preceding volume, may be regarded more as a preliminary course to the deeper study of a highly important subject than as comprehensive in itself, though Mr. Ashley has done wonders in the space at his disposal.

From the same.—'Our Colonial Cousins, or Britain beyond the Seas,' by W. Vere Mingard. This is an addition to the 'Round the World' Geographical Readers. As no date is given on the title-page we are unable to say whether it is recent or otherwise. The book seems to have been satisfactorily compiled, though we fail to detect any unusual signs of merit. Stress is laid upon the clearness of the type and the use of a dull-surface paper, both attributes being favourable to the sight. The illustrations, more particularly those in colour, might easily be improved upon. The large number of maps is a distinctly commendable feature.—Among other educational works to hand from Messrs. T. C. & E. C. Jack are Books I., II., and III. of 'The Three Term Arithmetic,' by J. W. Iliffe, M.A., of which we have previously expressed our opinion, and 'Our English Home,' by C. W. Crook, B.A., and W. H. Weston, B.A., a well-intentioned, efficiently executed manual in the 'Round the World Geographical Handbooks' series. The small price at which these works are issued may well supply subject for reflection.

From Mr. Alan Leo, 9 Lyncroft Gardens, West Hampstead.—'The Rationale of Astrology,' by Alfred H. Barley. Greater clearness of exposition would have improved this little volume, and in its supplementary pages it gives the impression of being sent out for advertising purposes.

From Messrs. Marshall Brothers.—'The Acts of the Apostles: Outline Studies in Primitive Christianity,' by W. H. Griffith Thomas, B.D. The purpose the author has had in view in these studies in the Book of Acts is 'to afford sufficient guidance to Christian workers to enable them to study carefully, and to master thoroughly, this important section of the Word of God.' He does not attempt to exhaust the subject of each study, but rather to encourage the student to think for himself on a well-defined basis. The book will be found an excellent preliminary to a more extensive investigation of the subject.

From Mr. John Murray.—'Notes on Volumetric Analysis,' by J. B. Russell, B.Sc., and A. H. Bell, B.Sc. This volume is an amplification of the authors' previous work on the same subject published in 1898. To the present edition chapters on the use of potassium bichromate, silver nitrate, iodine, and thiosulphate have been added, and the methods of standardising acids with sodium, chalk, and borax are also discussed. The main object of the book being to provide laboratory instructions for students attending secondary or technical schools, manipulative detail only occupies a minor position in its pages. A useful feature is that as the pupil advances in the book he will find fewer rules for his guidance, so that in this way he is led to act upon his own initiative. A large number of exercises are given, together with a small proportion of worked examples. The volume is very capably put together, and may cordially be commended to the attention of teachers.

From the same.—'An Introductory History of England from the Earliest Times to the Close of the Middle Ages,' by C. R. L. Fletcher. It requires but a very cursory examination of Mr. Fletcher's pages to show the reader that the success attending his volume (which has now reached a second edition, having previously been reprinted) is thoroughly well deserved. The author's object has been to avoid a stereotyped, scholastic style, and to make his work interesting, both in material and method of narration, to his boy readers, and though he seems to fall off a little in this laudable effort towards the close of his volume, the book, as a whole, is worthy of the heartiest commendation. The presence of several maps adds greatly to its value.

From Messrs. Novello & Company, Ltd.—'The Council School Hymn Book.' A collection of one hundred and fifty hymns, well printed, and bound in a limp red cover. The contents have been selected by the standard of their religious truth and suitability to the mental capacity of children. At the end are forms of Prayer for the opening and closing of school, &c.

From Mr. Alston Rivers.—'Hugh Rendal: a Public School Story,' by Lionel Portman. This is a capital book, which should appeal with overwhelming force both to schoolboys and to such of their seniors as have vivid remembrances of their own dormitory days. To some readers it may possibly appear that the minutiæ of public school routine is a little too closely described; but to those who have gone through the experience we are quite sure that not one detail of Hugh Rendal's trials and adventures would be

THE TUTORIAL CHEMISTRY.

Part II.—METALS AND PHYSICAL CHEMISTRY.

By G. H. BAILEY, D.Sc. Lond., Ph.D. Heidelberg.

Edited by WM. BRIGGS, LL.D., D.C.L., M.A., B.Sc., F.C.S., F.R.A.S.

willingly spared. The high tone of the book constitutes not the least of its many claims to notice. Commenting on the value of a public-school training, the author makes the following remarks, which we commend to the attention of parents: 'On the one side lie many advantages—developments of pluck, independence, leading power, of fairness, the sense of responsibility, the sense of one's level, the sense of brotherhood. On the other, many drawbacks—bullying, uncleanness, over-idolatry of athletics at the expense of work and character; the power of the boy to waste his time much as he likes; the power of the master to keep his place and make money out of the boy's food long after he has ceased to be efficient; the lack of thoroughness; the frequent cry of the parent, "I pay much and get practically nothing"; and the almost unnatural disdain of brainwork too often fostered in his son.'

From Messrs. George Routledge & Sons. 'Routledge's New Universal Library,' clearly printed on thin paper with an artistic olive green binding, deserves well of the reading public, and rarely have such well designed, moderately priced volumes been placed on the market. The volumes recently issued include Maine's 'Ancient Law,' Lowell's 'My Study Windows,' 'On Translating Homer,' by Matthew Arnold, 'Records of Shelley, Byron, and the Author,' by Edward John Trelawney, 'Headlong Hall, Melincourt, Nightmare Abbey, Maid Marian,' by Thomas Love Peacock, and 'Cranford' and 'Sylvia's Lovers,' by Mrs. Gaskell. The handy size of these volumes, so convenient for carrying in the pocket, is an additional point in their favour.

From the same.—'A Descriptive Handbook of Architecture,' by Martin A. Buckmaster, A.R.C.A. Within the limits of a small work such as this it is impossible, as the author points out, to do more than outline the various styles of architecture, and to trace briefly their development. An elementary text-book, however, on simple lines and not of too technical a character, will serve a very useful purpose, and this Mr. Buckmaster's volume supplies. The book consists of twelve chapters, and among the various types of architecture treated of are the 'Comparative Classic,' 'Early Christian,' 'English Romanesque,' 'Early English, or First-Pointed Style,' 'The Decorated, or Middle-Pointed Style,' 'The Perpendicular, or Late-Pointed Style,' and the 'French Gothic.' Other chapters are devoted to a description of 'Greek and Roman Planning,' 'Vaulting,' &c. There are numerous illustrations to give emphasis to the text.

From the Scientific Press, Ltd.—'A Practical Guide to Cookery in West Africa and the Tropics,' by Sister Cockburn. No doubt the culinary bill of fare in most West African households is a little limited, and the effort of Sister Cockburn to provide a more extensive and appetising diet will be warmly appreciated. More especially does this apply to invalids and convalescents. The book conveys the impression of being useful and practical, and we are assured by the authoress that the recipes are easily prepared. To the clearness of the directions we can ourselves bear witness.

From the Walter Scott Publishing Co., Ltd. —'The Noble and Joyous History of King Arthur,' by Sir Thomas Malory. Edited by Ernest Rhys. 'Morte d'Arthur': the First Nine Books. The merits of the 'Scott Library,' which has been considerably reduced in price, are very apparent in this issue. The type is clear and sufficiently large, the paper thin, and the binding particularly neat, while the size of the volume renders it light to handle and convenient for the pocket. In his Introduction Mr. Rhys says all that is necessary, and, for the most part, says it well.

From Mr. W. Tempest, Dundalk.—'The Irish Motor Directory: a Reference Book for Motorists, 1905,' compiled by Henry G. Tempest. This little work contains a quantity of information that will be both interesting and useful to motorists. Of course the first issue of a work of this description can never be quite complete, but on the whole it may be said that Mr. Tempest has surmounted his difficulties with great adroitness, the result, we have little doubt, of painstaking application.

From Messrs. Anthony Treherne & Co., Ltd. —'Voyage Autour de ma Chambre,' par Xavier de Maistre. This is an addition to the 'Little Library of French Classics,' of which the distinguishing features are smallness of size, clear printing, and daintiness of binding. The volume also contains the 'Expédition Nocturne autour de ma Chambre' and 'Le Lépreux de la Cité d'Aoste.' We have also received from Messrs. Treherne copies of 'Cymbeline' and 'First Part of King Henry IV.' in their extremely neat miniature edition of Shakespeare's Plays.

From the University Tutorial Press.—'The Primary Arithmetic,' edited by Wm. Briggs, LL.D., M.A. Part 1. This little work treats of the four elementary branches of arithmetic — Addition, Subtraction, Multiplication, and Division—arranged in stages, the simpler forms being taken first. Numerous exercises form a feature of the book, the answers to which are given at the end. A more useful school manual within its limits it would be difficult to find.

From Mr. T. Fisher Unwin.—'The Original Poem of Job,' translated from the restored text by E. J. Dillon, to which is appended 'The Book of Job' according to the Authorised Version. One of the most interesting portions of this volume is the Introduction, in which Mr. Dillon shows himself no slavish follower of previous writers on the subject, but displays a refreshing independent of judgment. This prepares us for capability in the succeeding sections of the volume, in which anticipations we are happily not disappointed. The translation affords the reader a welcome opportunity of forming an opinion of his own on disputed points in connection with the Book of Job, 'on the basis of a text freed at last from the interpolations of centuries and restored as far as possible to the finished form it received from the hands of its author.'

From Frederick Warne & Co.—'Pioneers,' by Silas K. Hocking. This is a good story of Russian life, and, at a time when Russian stories are being overdone, is still worth reading. The story centres round a Russian family consisting of father, mother, and daughter. These have taken up their abode in a hut in the forests, and have established a secret printing press in a cave near by, from which they disseminate parts of the Gospel and the works of Tolstoy and other reformers; also they assist two deserters from the army, and enable them to cross the frontier. An English girl, who was a governess in St. Petersburg, also figures. The expert novel reader will be able to foretell early how the story will work out at the finish, but meantime there are many interesting episodes and some hairbreadth escapes. There is a distressing picture of the hardships suffered by prisoners on their terrible journey to Siberia, where all our friends eventually find themselves; the mother dies on the journey, and the father in Siberia, but the daughter and the two men escape at last and eventually settle down in England and are made happy.

From Messrs. Watts & Co.—'A Defence of Pessimism,' by David Irvine. This forms the first part of an introduction to the works of Schopenhauer by a thoroughpaced disciple of the master. That it throws any particular light on Schopenhauer's work that cannot be obtained from the perusal of his books we do not perceive, and we can hardly applaud the slashing and onesided criticism administered to all and sundry who do not happen to agree with Schopenhauer. It appears, on the author's own showing, that the real raison d'être of this work lies in the fact that the Daily Telegraph did not publish the author's letter contributed to the controversy 'Do we Believe?' which recently appeared in that paper, thereby, it is assumed, strangling opinion, with dire consequences, it would seem, to the prospect of truth being arrived at in this country. Schopenhauer is right and everybody else is wrong, that is the beginning and end of the argument. Works of this description invariably run on the same lines, and lose, we think, whatever power they may possess by their utter disregard of the possibility that the particular view they take may be wrong. You can be taken out on an electric tram somewhere and shown a tree, therefore that tree exists; you cannot be taken out anywhere and shown God in the same fashion, therefore He doesn't exist. This appeal to reasonable proof is only one side of the question. Why should reason be always assumed superior to faith? We may not admit it, but the fact remains that we build our everyday life upon faith, and if faith could be done away with even the world commercial would cease to exist. No, we cannot conceive that Schopenhauer is right and all the rest of us wrong; why, it is not even reasonable.

From the Welsh Educational Publishing Co., Merthyr Tydfil—'Flame-Bearers of Welsh History: being the Outline of the Story of "The Sons of Cunedda,"' by Owen Rhoscomyl. Mr. Rhoscomyl is nothing if not heroic, and he has endowed his narrative with an amount of spirit and heated imaginary that can scarcely fail to impress readers. As Principal Rhys warmly expresses himself in his preface, 'he lives and moves in the scenes he describes, he visits and revisits the sites, he studies the ground, and he draws his own conclusions with the certainty of one whose eyes have been

Commercial Publications

FOR

THE COMMERCIAL LAW OF ENGLAND.

Second Edition. Crown 8vo. 227 pp., cloth, price 2*s.* 6*d.* A Handbook for Business Men and Advanced Classes in Schools. By J. A. Slater, B.A., LL.B. (Lond.), of the Middle Temple and North-Eastern Circuit, Barrister-at-Law, Author of 'Law' in 'The Evolutionary History of England,' 'Pitman's Business Man's Guide,' and Lecturer under the School Board for London.

COMMERCIAL HISTORY.

An Introductory Treatise for the Use of Advanced Classes in Schools. By J. R. V. Marchant, M.A., formerly Scholar of Wadham College, Oxford, Examiner in Commercial History to the London Chamber of Commerce. 272 pp., crown 8vo., 3*s.*

FRENCH TRANSLATION AND COMPOSITION.

PITMAN'S FRENCH COMMERCIAL READER.

Crown 8vo. 208 pp., cloth gilt, price 2*s.* 6*d.* Deals in an interesting manner with the leading Commercial and National Institutions of France. The reading matter is most carefully selected, and while the student of French is improving his mastery of the language he is at the same time getting a good insight into French commercial methods. Thus while reading about invoices, the actual document is brought under his notice. Additional value is given to the book by the inclusion of questions and exercises. Maps, illustrations, and facsimiles of French commercial documents illustrate the text, and in addition the book contains a selection of commercial letters, a full list of commercial abbreviations in current use, and an exhaustive vocabulary of all different words used in the text. Accuracy is assured, as the Reader has been prepared under the supervision of well-known masters in modern languages.

ELEMENTARY GERMAN COMMERCIAL CORRESPONDENCE.

PITMAN'S GERMAN COMMERCIAL READER

is prepared on similar lines to the French Commercial Reader above. It furnishes a practical introduction to German commercial institutions and transactions, with questions and exercises which render it well suited for use in schools. Students are afforded the fullest help possible from plates, illustrations, maps, and facsimiles of German commercial documents. The text has had the benefit of revision by modern language masters in well-known schools. Crown 8vo. 208 pp., price 2*s.* 6*d.*

PITMAN'S COMMERCIAL GEOGRAPHY OF THE WORLD.

trained by the mother of invention in the school of experience.' The author shows, as the result of recent researches, that the apparently meaningless internecine struggles of the Welsh princes were the inevitable outcome of the tribal laws, and proves that the ancient prophecy that a descendant of Cunedda should again wear the British crown was a prime moving power throughout the many centuries of stubborn struggle. There are numerous illustrations (several in colour) and maps. A cheaper edition of the work is designed for use as a reader in secondary schools and the upper standards of primary schools, and for this it is well adapted.

From Messrs. Williams & Norgate.—'The Expansion of Christianity in the First Three Centuries,' by Adolph Harnack, translated and edited by James Moffatt, D.D., Vol. II. We have already expressed our opinion of the extreme value of Professor Harnack's work, the soundness of his reasoning, and the wide knowledge displayed. It is a treatise that no student of theology can afford to pass over. In the present instalment several additions and corrections, chiefly relating to the geographical data, which have been forwarded by the author, are incorporated. The printing and all-round production of the volume call for hearty commendation. Such a work more than sustains the previous high standard of the 'Theological Translation Library,' and is a credit to author, translator, and publishers alike.

From Messrs. John Wright & Co., Bristol.—'Natural Science in Hygiene,' by James Rodger Watson. This is a useful little book for students of public health, giving the life history of the non-bacterial parasites affecting man, such history being traced in a semi-diagrammatic form. The information is more likely to imprint itself on the memory in this way than through a multitude of words.

From the same.—'Dispensing Made Easy,' by W. G. Sutherland, M.B. Aberd. This is a second and revised edition of a valuable little work of practical hints and many useful formulæ for ensuring simplicity, economy, and rapidity in dispensing. Nearly half the book consists of blank pages for private formulæ and memoranda, which, from a doctor's point of view, adds greatly to its utility.

NEW EDITIONS.—Mr. John Lane has sent us a copy of Lord Beaconsfield's 'Coningsby, or the New Generation,' as published in the 'New Pocket Library.' The general production of these volumes, as we have previously stated, is excellent, and at their size and price it would be difficult to find better value.—Among the military manuals published by Messrs. Gale & Polden, the work on '"Telling Off" and "Posting" a Picquet,' though small, is of no slight importance. It has now reached a sixth edition, which has been carefully revised and brought up to date.—'Points in Punctuation, or how to Punctuate the King's English,' by John Bygott and A. J. Lawford Jones, has now reached a second edition, which the efficiency of the book well deserves. It furnishes a complete guide to the use of stops, with comprehensive exercises. Messrs. Jarrold & Sons are the publishers.

PUBLICATIONS OF THE WEEK.

WITH AN INDEX OF AUTHORS, TITLES, AND SUBJECTS OF BOOKS IN ONE ALPHABET.

All books are in cloth when not otherwise described. When the word 'net' is printed against the price of a book it means that there is not the usual trade allowance. The words of the Index which are printed in italics refer to the name under which the title of a work appears in larger type. Publishers who observe the omission of a book from the list will confer a favour by sending a copy of the title to the office for insertion in the next number.

ENGLISH GRAMMAR 2s. 6d.

With Historical Introduction and Copious Exercises. By T. D. Hall, M.A. Revised and Enlarged Edition. Crown 8vo. [Just published.

This edition has been thoroughly revised and brought up to date. The chapters on the classification of languages, sound shifting, and the historical development of English have been entirely re-written, and embody the most recent philological discoveries. The book as a whole follows closely the lines of the English language course recommended by the Board of Education for the training of teachers. The entire text has been re-set in a clear and striking type.

LIST OF

FORTHCOMING BOOKS.

AUTUMN, 1905.

READY IN A FEW DAYS.

By KATHLEEN WATSON.

Third Edition. Crown 8vo. cloth, extra gilt top, price 2*s*. 6*d*. net.

'"Litanies of Life," by Kathleen Watson, is a little book containing five short stories, but every one of them is worth reading, and the note of all sounds sweet and true. The reader will lay down the book, as I did, with a feeling of profound sympathy and gratitude to the writer, in whose pages they can hear the tremulous throb of an intense emotion, which, however, does not obscure the finer and stronger note of heroic resolve.'—W. T. Stead.

NEW AND REVISED EDITION.
READY IN A FEW DAYS.

THREE LITTLE GARDENERS

By AGNES J. TALBOT.

Twenty-six Illustrations by Miss GERTRUDE M. BRADLEY.

A Diary of twelve months' work in a child's garden. A delightful little book of fun, frolic, and work by busy little hands and active brains. Coloured frontispiece. Square 8vo. cloth gilt, price 2*s*. 6*d*. net.

SIX-SHILLING NOVELS.

Crown 8vo. cloth gilt.

THE LADY NAVIGATORS. By Edward Noble, Author of 'The Edge of Circumstance.'

[Ready early in September.

Mr. Noble's work has been compared by the critics with that of Rudyard Kipling and Joseph Conrad. His new book is another story of the sea, displaying a delightfully humorous element that should win the author many new admirers.

THE BENEFACTOR. By Ford Madox Hueffer.

[Early in September.

An admirable piece of character drawing. The literary quality of the style is that of a true artist, and the story is interesting from the first page to the last. We confidently anticipate that this will prove one of the most widely read novels of the year.

LIEUTENANT GULLIVER JONES. By Edwin Lester Arnold.

[Early in September.

The author of 'Phra, the Phœnician' gives us here the adventures of a resourceful American sailor in the planet Mars. Although Mr. Arnold's Martians have little in common with the weird creations of Mr. H. G. Wells, his book holds the reader from start to finish, and has the advantage of possessing a strong love interest.

London: BROWN, LANGHAM & CO., Ltd. 78 New Bond Street, W.

LADY JIM OF CURZON STREET.

By Fergus Hume, Author of 'The Mystery of a Hansom Cab.' Cover design by Charles E. Dawson. Crown 8vo. cloth gilt, 6*s*.

While this is a smart Society novel in place of his more familiar detective work, Mr. Hume gives his readers plenty of mystery and excitement from his first page to his last, and they will find in the book just those qualities which have made his work so popular.

THE COST.

By David Graham Phillips. Crown 8vo. cloth gilt, 6*s*.

RED O' THE FEUD.

By Halliwell Sutcliffe, Author of 'A Man of the Moors,' 'Mistress Barbara Cunliffe,' &c. Crown 8vo. 6*s*.

PLAYING THE KNAVE.

By Florence Warden, Author of 'The House on the Marsh.' Crown 8vo. cloth, 6*s*.

THE CATHEDRAL SERIES. NEW VOLUME.

THE CATHEDRALS OF ENGLAND AND WALES.

By T. Francis Bumpus, Author of 'Summer Holidays Among the Glories of France.' With many Plates and minor decorations, and specially designed heads and tailpieces to each chapter. Two vols. 8vo. decorative cover, cloth gilt, 6*s*. net each.

Vol. I. Ready. Vol. II. September.

PICTURES IN UMBRIA.

By Katharine S. Macquoid, Author of 'In the Ardennes,' 'About Yorkshire,' &c. With 50 original Illustrations by Thomas R. Macquoid, R.I. (Uniform with 'The Cathedral Series.') Price 6*s*. net.

ICONOCLASTS: a Book of Dramatists.

Illuminating critical studies of modern revolutionary playwrights. By James Huneker. Crown 8vo. 6*s*. net.

THE CAPTAINS AND THE KINGS.

Intimate Reminiscences of Nobilities. By Henry Haynie, Author of 'Paris, Past and Present,' and Chevalier de la Legion d'Honneur. With 8 facsimiles of autograph letters. $8\frac{1}{4} \times 5\frac{1}{2}$. Cloth gilt, 348 pages. Price 6*s*. net.

The

'THE BOOKSELLER'S GUIDE OF CORRESPONDENCE.'*

From Mr. Karl Fr. Pfau, publisher, of Leipzig, we have received Part 1 of a very useful and interesting work, entitled 'The Bookseller's Guide of Correspondence in German, English, and French.' In addition to being interesting and useful, it has also distinct claims to be an amusing work, and we shall look forward to the appearance of the nineteen parts with much enthusiasm, especially if the authors continue the English part of the work in the same bold and original style as we find in Part 1.

To give an idea of the scope of the publication we cannot do better than take a few sentences from the Preface and Introduction :

'The Present book is the result of our own practical experiences. The Authors believe not to ought to retain to their Colleagues the materials, gathered by themselves in the course of many years, because not every bookseller—especially the youngest ones—will be able to satisfy all pretensions relating to the matter. The title of the book announces sufficiently its content, so that no more explications are needed. Special attention has been given to the shortness of the examples, and we hope for this reason the authors will be approved.

'Hereby the abundance of the subjects is not diminished. On the contrary it even may be maintained, that the bookseller's correspondence never ago has been offered in so complete a manner as the present. The parallel of the foreign languages will exceedingly raise the utility of our book.'

The last sentence means that the German, English, and French text is given in parallel columns—an excellent plan without doubt, especially if one is in doubt as to the exact meaning of some of the English sentences. Referring to the contents we are told that

'In the following are given several examples, which should be realized in one kind or another, and in the form done they also may be realized.'

Here are a few examples from the models for correspondence :

Mr. Charles Weise, writing from Kurfürstendamm 200, Berlin, has the honour to inform the book trade that he has 'engaged Mr. Volckmar at Leipsic with my commissions, and he will be able to reimburse cash parcels at every time and to afford payments for me. I request your kind support and patronage for my young enterprise.'

In Model No. 6 Mr. Charles Wagner, in announcing the 'foundation of a secondhand book trade,' says that

'As fundamental of my house I acquired by purchase the stock of Mr. N. N.' His catalogue will be ready soon, and he begs his correspondents 'to inform me, in serving yourselves of the enclosed bill of commanding, what kind of catalogues you desire to receive.'

We could not think at first what 'bill of commanding' meant, but of course it is intended for 'order form.'

In Model No. 7 Mr. Schulz begins a circular thus :

'Sir

'I beg to acquaint the venerable Book-trade that I have founded' &c. &c., and he adds : 'Being sufficiently provided with the necessary funds, required for the conduct of such a business, MMrs. publishers, will not go to risk in entering in relations with me.'

In Model No. 9 the writer says : 'Having acquired a long practice under the most respectable bookselling houses he will be able to satisfy the highest pretensions.' Evidently sending goods which are not ordered is not unknown in the German book trade, for in most of these model letters we find some note of this kind : 'As we prefer to choose ourselves, we are wanting in future, please do not make us uncommanded sendings.'

In a note on p. 22 the authors remark that

'There is no question, that every bookseller, who has founded or acquired a book-trade, always is penetrated by the best intentions. But for realizing them he must have well regulated relations with the publishers'—so models of letters asking for credit accounts to be opened are given ; but the young beginner is warned that 'there is no doubt that such a demand is not at every time accepted in a kind manner ; in contrary it may be received in a less obliging way, and the young bookseller should seriously count with this fact.'

Then follows a model of the kind of letter the young bookseller should send to the firm he wants goods and credit from, in which he slyly says :

'The principal customers of my new business were already asking at different times for novelties of your honourable house.

'At my utmost regret I could not satisfy them, because I had not the honour to stay in relations with you.'

This brings a favourable reply from the firm, who offer to give him credit for £25 if he consents 'to pay an instalment of £5 in advance for the credit opened.' They send their catalogue and request Mr. Trojahn to 'design us the books of which you expect to have satisfactory results.'

A specimen of an unfavourable reply is also given :

'We therefore ask you to procure your supplies from our house for cash, but desiring to be agreeable to you, we propose to furnish for cash, but with right to return, the works, in a case or other, you are wanting for, thus, as we believe, your house will not go to risk. Being forced by circumstances to refuse your request, we although beg you to take interest to our publications.'

As models of bookseller's correspondence the English examples of which we have given a few specimens are too beautiful for words. What we cannot understand is why the authors did not get an Englishman to edit their English for them. The German text is, of course, all right ; the French seems a big groggy in places ; as for the English, as we said before, we are eagerly awaiting the rest of the work, and trust it is all printed and cannot be made into commonplace English by correction.

Vicar's Wife (warmly)—Oh, I'm so glad to hear that. So many of these wealthy men have no religion !—Punch.

NOTES AND ANNOUNCEMENTS.

Messrs. Maclaren & Co. announce that they will issue this month a shilling edition of 'The House of Sin,' by Marcelle Tinayre.

'A Royal Craft: Notes on the History and Progress of Printing,' by F. H. S. Ellis, with Preface by Mr. E. R. Alexander, will be published on October 1 by Alfred B. Davis, Ltd., Victoria Press, Epping, Essex.

The Auto Cycle Club have arranged for six days' reliability trials of motor cycles, covering practically the whole of the Western Midlands and South Coast of England. The first illustrated description of these trials will be published in the Motor Cycle for the 21st inst.

'Patriotism: an Essay towards a Constructive Theory of Politics,' by H. Egerton, will be published by Mr. George Allen early in October.

Mr. Unwin will publish on August 21 a volume by Mr. Edward Irving, entitled 'How to Know the Starry Heavens.'

He will also publish on the same date, in pamphlet form, a lecture on 'The Cause of Industrial Depression,' delivered by Mr. Arthur Kitson at the New Reform Club.

Mr. John Lane will publish, on August 22, a new novel by A. E. J. Legge, entitled 'The Ford.' Mr. Legge will be remembered principally as the author of 'Mutineers' and 'Both Great and Small,' both novels.

A reprint of Edward FitzGerald's 'Euphranor,' a new volume in 'The New Pocket Library,' will appear on the same date. It contains an Introduction by Frederic Chapman.

The Walter Scott Publishing Co., Ltd., publish this week the 'Story of the Harp,' from the pen of Mr. W. H. Grattan Flood, Organist of Enniscorthy Cathedral, forming the sixth volume of 'The Music Story' series, edited by Mr. Frederick J. Crowest, author of 'The Grand Tone Poets' &c.

Mr. Eden Phillpotts's 'Children of the Mist' will be issued in 'The Novelist' in a few days, and the third volume of the 'Standard Library' edition of Shakespeare's works will appear at the same time.

Messrs. Oliver & Boyd have in preparation a small volume on 'Scottish Sanitary Laws and Principles of Public Health,' by Dr. W. J. Brock, Medical Officer of Health for Midlothian, &c. This book should be of great value to county and borough councillors, medical officers of health, sanitary inspectors, &c., &c. It will be published next month.

A novel by Miss Margaret Watson, bearing the title of 'Driven,' will appear on August 21 in Mr. Unwin's 'Green Cloth Library.'

The September number of the Pall Mall Magazine (ready August 18) contains the first of a series of stories entitled 'The Trials of Commander McTurk,' by C. J. Cutcliffe Hyne, the creator of Captain Kettle.

In view of the Trafalgar Centenary, the Walter Scott Publishing Co., Ltd., are just issuing a tale entitled 'In Nelson's Day,' from the pen of Mr. J. G. Rowe, author of the popular work, 'Webs of Mystery.' 'In Nelson's Day' will be illustrated with Nelson relics and sold at a popular price.

Mr. E. Alfred Jones is at present engaged in preparing for publication by Messrs. Bemrose & Sons, Ltd., a volume on 'Old English Gold Plate,' with numerous illustrations of all the existing specimens in the possession of his Majesty the King, the Dukes of Devonshire, Norfolk, Portland, Newcastle, Rutland, and other noblemen, and the colleges of Oxford and Cambridge; he is also writing for the same publishers volumes on 'The Church Plate of the Diocese of Bangor,' and 'The Church Plate of the Isle of Man.'

'The Life of Sir Aglovale de Galis,' by Clemence Housman, brings into full light from the record of Malory the history of the most despised of King Arthur's knights. His strenuous attempts to retrieve his honour and his death without renown form two of the incidents of the book. Before the end he has won the love of his worst enemy, the fear of King Arthur, and the envy of Lancelot. Messrs. Methuen are the publishers.

By arrangement with the executors of the late Samuel Smiles, the Walter Scott Publishing Co., Ltd., are issuing a work on 'The Nurture and Management of Children,' left by the famous author of 'Self Help.' Sir Hugh Beevor, Bart., M.D., F.R.C.P., is editing the volume, with suitable additions to the text.

The Caxton Press, Ltd., Furnival Street, London, are about to publish a book written by Dr. Walford Bodie, the well-known music-hall and theatre entertainer. It is entitled 'The Bodie Book,' and deals in a popular vein with electro-hypnotism, telepathy, mental suggestion, clairvoyance, magnetic touch, and various other occult subjects. It is dedicated to the British medical men—an interesting fact in view of the recent proceedings against Dr. Bodie on the ground that he holds his diplomas from an American University and not a British one.

CHRISTIANITY AND EDUCATION IN MODERN JAPAN.*

Professor Clement, author of a 'Handbook of Modern Japan,' here attempts a survey of the moral forces which are now in full energy in Japan. The new man in the Mikado's Empire has an ever-widening horizon of ideas and ideals. As he entered into that full realisation of national unity which necessarily came from outside pressure, he raised the cry of 'Japan for the Japanese!' His second ideal is 'Japan for Asia!' The third, which has been shaped especially since the new treaties came into effect in the summer of 1899, is 'Japan for the world!' The first ambition was merely a national, the second was an Asiatic, the present is an international or cosmopolitan Japan. Very curiously, 'one of the most conservative institutions in Japan is the Department of Education, which often fails to keep pace with the general progress. It falls to the discredit of this department of the Government that the reactionary spirit lingers there longer than in most other places.' In this judgment of the author few foreigners familiar with the educational problem in Japan will fail to acquiesce. On the other hand, it is hard to see how it could be otherwise while the Government and nation have been so absorbed in material progress and military energies.

In his twenty-one chapters, which are appropriately illustrated with good half-tone pictures and reinforced with map, bibliography, index, and tables, Professor Clement surveys his subject historically as well as descriptively, telling of preparation, foundation, popularity, reaction, and revival. He treats first of the various phases, Greek, Roman, and Reformed, of Christian work. He then discusses special themes, lines of enterprise, literature, education, and the philanthropic and sociological movements, pointing out also the great contrasts between 1853 and 1903. It would be difficult, we think, to handle the subject in a more liberal-minded manner. The Principal of the Duncan Baptist Academy in Tokio shows that the Roman Catholic Church throughout the East is noted for its splendid charities, and is doing more to care for the helpless, aged, and infirm than all the Protestant bodies combined. Occupying a relatively modest place in the work of publication and education, she takes nevertheless the first rank in works of charity, spending about $50,000 on her twenty-one orphanages, and looking after the sick in the hospitals without regard to the rank or social condition of the patients. All the work of the Greek Catholic or Russian Church centres in every respect around one man, Nicolai. Coming to Japan in 1861 as Chaplain of the Russian Consulate in Hakodate, he made himself master of the language and literature of Japan, so that his preaching was singularly powerful. In Russia he raised the funds for erecting the white marble Cathedral of the Resurrection in Tokio, which is probably the most imposing structure in Japan. The building operations covered seven years, and the edifice cost nearly $100,000. A man of amazing labours, Nicolai at seventy takes little or no vacation. He has himself trained up most of his priests and pastors, many of whom, educated in Russia, are now engaged largely in ministering to the Muscovite prisoners and teaching illiterate Russians to read and write their own language—for the military prison schools of Japan are conducted on a plan somewhat different from those at Andersonville or Elmira. The manner in which the Greek Church Christians in Japan are taught to be strenuous in patriotism, while the Japanese Government guards from harm the Tokio cathedral night and day, is the best commentary on the words of Premier Katsura: 'I sincerely hope no one will be betrayed into the error of supposing that such things as differences in race or religion have anything whatever to do with the present complication.'

* Christianity in Modern Japan. By Ernest W. Clement. (Philadelphia: American Baptist Publication Society. 1905.)

Professor Clement devotes one chapter to religious liberty in Japan, showing how thoroughly the present Government has put into liberal practice the constitutional provision for freedom of conscience. In a special interview had in 1905 by the author, the Prime Minister reiterated with emphasis his assurance that the constitutional provision is to be justly enforced. The most serious inroads upon national traditions, customs, and dogmas are made by the work of the Reformed or Protestant churches, which aim at nothing else than reconstructing, on a higher moral plane, the entire life of the people. The proofs that this is being done in language, in art, in social life, in political and social conceptions, are overwhelming. 'Liberty,' a term practically absent from the vocabulary of the old Chinese world of ideas, is now well domesticated in common speech. In books and newspapers, quotations from the Bible are often used in the same way as are extracts from Japanese and Chinese classics and Buddhist scriptures. In a long a very valuable Appendix, printed in the same type as the body of the work, Professor Clement shows that he clearly understands the similarity between the situation, or the 'conflict,' as Ulhorn calls it, in the ancient Roman and the modern Eastern world. The true improvement or 'conversion' of the Japanese nation must be by evolution rather than by revolution.

While the tables of statistics are not only very full, but perhaps the latest and most complete, it must be remembered that the very best work by aliens for the making of the new Japan was done in those apparently hopeless years between 1859 and 1872, when the supposed fruitlessness of the work was proverbial. In literary proportion and breadth of view and in keenness of insight, this book is a model. It is all the more likely to be permanent in its influence because of its cool, judicial temper.—New York Nation.

NEW POLICY AS REGARDS FOREIGN BOOKS IN RUSSIA.

ACCORDING to the St. Petersburg Novoye Vremya, the Kobeko Commission on press reforms, after thoroughly considering the question of censorship as applied to native books, turned its attention to the proper treatment of imported books in foreign languages, and found that the situation in that respect was even more anomalous and chaotic than with regard to the national literary output. Russia is the country of translations par excellence. She reads and devours everything, and American or German or Italian or Dutch books that are hardly known in their own respective countries are promptly translated and read by her intelligencia. Her magazines are full of translated fiction from English, French, and other sources. In view of these facts the duties of the censors have not been light, and they have fallen into many ludicrous blunders and paradoxes. Thus many books which one department permitted in translations another prohibited in the original, and while a man might be punished for selling or possessing a given French book, there was nothing to prevent him from selling or buying the same book in a Russian translation. The official report submitted to the Commission showed, says the paper referred to, that in the years 1871–99 ten thousand foreign books were prohibited by the censors, and these books included all forms of literature. There has never been any revision of this 'index,' and the Minister of the Interior has offered to examine the whole list and remove the ban from at least two-thirds of the number. With regard to the future, he proposed to abolish the censorship as to all scientific books in foreign languages, including books on politics, social science, and economics, while retaining it with reference to fiction, poetry, plays, and 'popular' literature generally. The liberal members of the Commission regarded these proposals as inadequate, and advocated greater freedom and less 'distrust of books,' though they be written in other languages.—Literary Digest.

NEWSVENDORS' BENEVOLENT AND PROVIDENT INSTITUTION.

FESTIVAL, 1905.

SIR HORACE BROOKS MARSHALL, M.A., J.P., D.L., LL.D., a trustee and Vice-President of this Institution, has kindly consented to preside at the sixty-sixth Anniversary Festival in aid of the funds and to advocate the objects of the Newsvendors' Benevolent and Provident Institution.

The reception and dinner will be held at De Keyser's Royal Hotel, Victoria Embankment, on Tuesday evening, October 31.

It is anticipated that a large and representative assembly of the vast news trade will forgather to support Sir Horace in maintaining and extending the benevolent purposes of the Newsvendors' Institution as a monument worthy of the best traditions of the British news trade. To this end Sir Horace has endeavoured to fix upon a date which he and the Committee trust will be convenient to friends resident in Scotland, Ireland, the Provinces, and Metropolis.

AN HISTORICAL ATLAS OF EUROPE.

LIEUTENANT-COLONEL WILLIAM R. LIVERMORE, of New York, has been engaged for a number of years on a rather exhaustive 'Historical Atlas of Europe,' and now has it so far along that he hopes it may be published within the next two or three years. He aims to show by a series of maps, usually one for each decade, all the political changes that can be represented on a scale of 1: 7,000,000. He has three maps for the period from 1500 to 800 B.C., then one for every fifty years down to 550 B.C., and from 520 B.C. one for every ten years, down to 1900 A.D. Such a work has long been wanted, as the use of maps as aids in showing historical development is an unquestionable advantage. Green's 'History of the English People' owes much much of its popularity to the excellent series of maps.

NAPOLEON.

The following story about Napoleon from this month's Good Words will probably be new to most students of Napoleonic literature. An officer, General Sir Duncan Macgregor, who had been on duty when Napoleon was a prisoner at Elba, writing home to his friends, relates that on one occasion the officers in Elba invited their friends to a picnic; among them were some English ladies who were bitterly hostile to ‘the little corporal.’ After lunch the company amused themselves with a game of ‘forfeits,’ and were very merry. The penalty pronounced on one of the English ladies was that (if ever she had the opportunity) she should kiss Napoleon. While the fun was at its height a clatter of hoofs startled them and Napoleon rode up. Dismounting, he stepped with a bow into the midst of the circle, and begged for a share in the merriment. No one spoke, and all looked at the lady whose blushes betrayed her. But Napoleon would take no refusal, and insisted on one of the officers explaining the English game. Then with a profound bow he went up to the lady and redeemed her forfeit, saluting her with such grace that the English party cheered him!

In the same article is given a hitherto unpublished letter (dated Paris, Nov. 26, 1802), from the poet Rogers, in which he describes the First Consul as having an elegant profile —‘his eyes are grey and his eyebrows scarcely distinguishable, and his face is overspread with one dead hue. His head is indeed, to use the expression of a celebrated painter here, “une tete de mort.” But it is the head of a giant. He measures less than five feet five inches, but his hat, as I am well informed, will spin round the head of the tallest and most robust general in his army.’

A NEW GAELIC MAGAZINE.

‘AN DEO-GHRÉINE’ (‘THE SUNBEAM’).

An Comunn Gaidhealach proposes to issue a monthly magazine for the promotion of its objects, the first number of which, it is intended, shall appear about the time of the Annual Mod, which is to be held in Dingwall in September next.

The Comunn has been in existence for fourteen years, and during that time the want of an organ through which to report its doings, sustain the interest of its members, appeal for support, put on record the results of its work, and generally assist in the furtherance of its objects, has been much felt. It has now resolved to overcome this want by the publication of a bi-lingual magazine—Gaelic and English—in which subjects of interest to the Gaelic people and others friendly to their cause will find a place.

The magazine will be non-political and non-sectarian. Its sole purpose will be to elevate the Gaelic people of Scotland, by stimulating their interest in themselves as a people, and by purifying their impressions of their historical past and their aspirations for the future. An endeavour will be made to keep the readers in touch with the whole Gaelic movement, of which An Comunn Gaidhealach is the pivot in Scotland, by news of the principal occurrences in that connection. Progress in the Comunn's own work will be reported from time to time. Mod prize literature and articles of general information, Gaelic songs and music, Gaelic story and humour, items of interest to the young and the fair sex, and notes and queries will regularly form part of the contents.

The size of the magazine is to be sixteen pages, crown quarto, price 3*d.*, or 4*d.* free by post; and the yearly subscription 3*s.*, or 4*s.* post free.

The management and editing of the magazine has been entrusted to the care of Mr. Malcolm MacFarlane, 1 Macfarlane Place, Elderslie, by Johnstone, to whom all communications and literary contributions are to be addressed. The printing and publishing are to be in the hands of Mr. Eneas Mackay, publisher, Stirling, to whom orders may be sent.

ART FOR ART'S SAKE.

I saw him in his yearning youth,
Before the change that brought the heart's ache,
A plunger down the wells of Truth,
And sworn to follow Art for Art's sake.
O frost that nips the nascent rose!
O bloom that prematurely blithers!
How could we then foresee the close
Of Andrea del Resarto Smithers?

The Editor of Brush and Plume,
A man of sound commercial fibre,
Thought Andrea's art might be a boom
And catch the better-class subscriber;
But often, owing to the stress
Of more immediate local matters,
That graphic print would go to press
Without his prancing nymphs and satyrs.

Then came the sudden Kodak phase,
When Art was shelved for Actualities,
The Living-Types-of-Beauty craze,
Stage Frights and semi-nude banalities;
Back flew the latest masterpiece
Enclosed with editorial strictures:
‘These contributions must now cease;
No further use for fancy pictures.’

The blow, although no blood was spilt,
Could hardly fail to wring the withers
Of one so delicately built
As Andrea del Resarto Smithers;
He bowed before the crushing fates,
Then rose again by nice gradations,
And now he does the fashion plates
Published in Woman's Transformations.

'Tis true he owns a sumptuous flat
Who once conversed with gods in garrets;
I grant he's growing sleek and fat
On turtle soup and vintage clarets;
But none the less when I recall
The former hopes on which he fasted,
I recognise the moral fall,
The great career untimely blasted.

AN IRISH LADY PRINTER.

The Dun Emer Press, Dundrum, in the County of Dublin, Ireland.

Though many books are printed in Ireland, book-printing as an art has been little practised here since the eighteenth century. The Dun Emer Press has been founded in the hope of reviving this beautiful craft. A good eighteenth-century fount of type which is not eccentric in form nor difficult to read has been cast, and the paper has been made of linen rags and without bleaching chemicals at the Saggart Mill in the County Dublin. The pages are printed on a hand-press by Miss E. C. Yeats, and simplicity is aimed at in their composition.

Books already printed: ‘In the Seven Woods,’ by W. B. Yeats, published in August 1903 (out of print); ‘The Nuts of Knowledge,’ by A. E., published in December 1903 (out of print); ‘The Love Songs of Connacht,’ by Dr. Douglas Hyde, published in July 1904 (out of print); ‘Twenty-One Poems,’ by Lionel Johnson, published in February 1905 (a few copies still remain).

Now ready: ‘Stories of Red Hanrahan,’ by W. B. Yeats.

Books in preparation: ‘Essays,’ by John Eglinton (ready this month); ‘A Selection from the Poems of William Allingham’ (ready in November); ‘A Book of Saints and Wonders,’ by Lady Gregory (will be ready in the spring of 1906).

Subscribers' names will be received by Miss Elizabeth C. Yeats, at the Dun Emer Press, Dundrum, County Dublin. Subscriptions payable in advance.

WHY SOME PEOPLE HAVE ‘A HOLY HORROR OF BOOK-BUYING.’

Glances over the catalogue of a circulating library and at an article in the Publishers' Circular raise questions about our way of dealing with books and dealing in books which perhaps nobody can answer. Why, in the first place, are British books so expensive compared with those on the Continent? The reply may be that paper-makers, printers, binders, and authors are more highly paid in England and America than on the Continent. Authors do make more money, if successful, in Anglo-Saxon than in other communities, I believe, for most of the literary papers keep advertising their gains, and we hear of no such matter from abroad. Possibly authors are less fond of advertisement in France, Italy, Russia, and Germany; but, on the whole, I conceive that our popular novelists are really wealthier men than their foreign brethren, and doubtless all the other associated trades, as of printers, paper-makers, and binders, and publishers of advertisements of all sorts are also better remunerated, and all this may cause our books to be much more expensive than those of France and Germany.

But would not all the trades, from authors downwards, do as well if they sold twice the number of books at half the present prices? In France you can get a thick history, say, of Russia, or M. Maspero's work on the ancient Eastern nations, in a paper wrapper for seven francs. In England a translation of the same book would probably occupy two tall volumes in cloth, and would cost, say, eighteen shillings. But very few people would buy it, and the circulating libraries are not hospitable to any book which is not a novel, and is serious and instructive. Consequently, the French book is bought pretty freely by people who want to know about its subject, while the British book is very sparingly bought, and the public knows nothing about its subject, and commercial houses, Mr. Maurice Baring informs us, go on addressing letters of business to 'the Port of Moscow.' Pretty exhaustive general ignorance of everything prevails, because people do not read. Do they not read because our books are so dear, or are our books so dear because they do not read, and of a serious book only a few copies can be published, at prices which seem ridiculously high? France has not carried the pernicious system of circulating libraries to so high a pitch of organisation as we have. Therefore, a Frenchman, if he wants to read a book, buys it, and buys it cheap; whereas we, demoralised by circulating libraries, ask them for any serious book which we want to read, and are kept waiting till we forget all about it. The book is expensive, and we have therefore a holy horror of book buying. It is an ancient constitutional British horror. In the prime of Scott's popularity, when heavy expensive quartos were in fashion, a new novel of his in three volumes and in blue pasteboard covers cost a guinea. He remarked to Constable that of the well-to-do lairds in the valleys of Tweed, Teviot, Ettrick, and Gala not one spent ten pounds annually on books. Probably they did not spend more than three guineas annually, and that only if three Waverley novels came out in the course of the year. Perhaps these heavy expensive quartos of the eighteenth and early nineteenth centuries knocked British book buying on the head for ever. In the sixteenth and seventeenth centuries books were much humbler in form and binding, the sheepskin served the turn, and were actually as well as relatively cheaper than in the eighteenth or early nineteenth centuries. Bunyan's 'Pilgrim's Progress' and Walton's 'Angler,' in calf, at a shilling were really cheap, and sold freely. Now each of them, if they came out, would cost at least six shillings. 'Collins's 'Odes' lie before me; they failed to sell at a shilling, and Collins, I think, burned the set. Now they would fail to sell at five shillings in gilded cloth covers.

Constable conceived the idea of selling books so cheap that even lairds would buy them. This was the beginning of 'series' of history and science 'on the cheap,' history without references, and the kind of science which 'goes in at one ear and out at the other.' These sorts of things are 'books which are no books,' and are by no means purchased so largely as Constable expected them to be.

A good deal of the expense of books is probably chargeable, says The Publishers' Circular, 'to the long established trade custom of putting an expensive cloth binding, which will last fifty years, on books which will be dead in five months.' A look at the titles of the works in the circulating library catalogue does not encourage me to feel certain that they will all last as long as their expensive cloth covers, say, half a century.

People must no doubt read these romances, but do they buy them at six shillings a piece, minus discount? Would they not buy far more of them at half-a-crown without expensive cloth covers? I think they would, for ladies who never purchase a novel in this country fill their shelves with Tauchnitz's English novels, bought abroad, and do not grudge the expense of a plain half binding. One cannot but think that an author popular in expensive cloth would be more popular in cheap paper. But, even so, he would have to compete with the sixpenny novel.—From an article by Mr. Andrew Lang in the Morning Post.

FROM 'THE CATHEDRALS OF ENGLAND AND WALES.' By T. FRANCIS BUMPUS.

(Published by Mr. T. Werner Laurie.)

SIR WILLIAM LAIRD CLOWES.

It was only a short time after he had undertaken his 'History of the Royal Navy' for Messrs. Sampson Low, Marston & Company, that the late Sir William Laird Clowes was attacked with consumption. In his Preface to that great work, written not many months ago, he said: 'Begun at a time when I was in my usual good health, Volume I. was still in the rough when I was attacked by a malady which, though its action is sometimes slow, seldom spares the life of its victim; and in consequence I was suddenly ordered away from England, where alone I could have prosecuted the work under conditions entirely favourable. Except during brief intervals, I had to remain abroad or in the Channel Islands until the autumn of 1902.' Only those who were connected with Sir William during the progress of his history can have any idea of the difficulties under which he laboured. Often for days and weeks he was unable, on account of physical suffering and exhaustion, to do the work he longed to finish. Often work was done in direct opposition to the entreaties of his medical adviser. In addition to being thus terribly burdened by illness, Sir William soon found that the labour of love which he had undertaken was to be far greater than he had anticipated; the work which, when completed a year or two ago, filled seven royal quarto volumes of between 600 and 700 pages each, was in Sir William's original estimate to have been completed in five volumes of 500 pages; even then, in order to get the matter in, small type had to be resorted to much more than was contemplated, notes accumulated, and the liberal estimate for illustrations and battle plans was also greatly exceeded

It was Sir William's great fear that he would not live to complete his work, and it was indeed a surprise to his friends that he was able to do so—a surprise and also a great satisfaction—for this fight to complete the only full and complete account of the British Navy, carried on so bravely for years, was as much a struggle for victory as was Nelson's last great campaign against the French. The honour of Knighthood was never more nobly won by a fight for the honour and glory of the British Navy than in this work of Sir William Laird Clowes—the wonder is not that it was so well done, but that it could be done at all.

It is wonderful how the pulse of our nation responds to the influences of sea power. As long as no nation with a navy is looking angry across the seas, our people take but a languid interest in the navy and naval matters; in such times—and we have had them now since the excitement of the Emperor's telegram and Cleveland's message passed away—the sale of works about the navy, with the single exception of those of Captain Mahan, is very slow. But once the word is passed that some nation with a fleet is threatening us and instinctively and instantly the British fleet comes into our view, we think of what it has been to us in the past, what it is to us in the present, and what we hope it will be in the future, and then we cannot read too much about it. It was to the last period when the heart of the nation was beating for sea, but with that proud and delicious feeling of confidence in the fleet, that Sir William proposed his great History to Messrs. Sampson Low, Marston & Co., who had published so many naval works. The naval book breeze was blowing strongly, and if Sir William's health had remained good, it would have filled the sails of his venture even more strongly than it did.

It is unnecessary to refer to the importance of the 'History of the Royal Navy.' Perhaps the best of the many tributes which have appeared in the press respecting its author is that from the Daily Mail, whose naval expert is Mr. H. W. Wilson, author of 'Ironclads in Action,' and one of the chief contributors to the History:

'We regret to announce the death of Sir William Laird Clowes, which took place on Monday last at St. Leonards. The famous naval writer, who had been out of health for many years, died quietly in his sleep.

'Everyone who loves and cares for the British Navy will hear with sorrow of the death of its most devoted friend and most famous historian. The eldest son of a Registrar in Chancery, born at Hampstead, and living all his earlier years among London newspaper offices, Laird Clowes soon learnt the art of interesting his fellow-countrymen in the supremely interesting study of his own life; and modern popular interest in the Navy is largely his creation.

'The first volume of his greatest and best-known work, "The Royal Navy: A History from the Earliest Times to the Present," was published in 1897, and the subsequent six volumes appeared at short intervals till 1903. President Roosevelt, Sir Clements Markham, and Captain Mahan were among the contributors to the work, which earned for its author a knighthood. Owing to ill-health Mr. Clowes lived much out of England, chiefly at Davos, and no one knew his address when the honour was to be announced to him. The announcement was finally sent to his publishers, and Sir William himself saw it for the first time in the newspapers.

'Sir William was one of the first and most popular contributors to the Daily Mail, his articles always managing to convey warnings and criticism on naval matters without undue pessimism. Under his pseudonym of "Nauticus" he wrote other interesting papers on "The Needs of the Navy," which were translated into half a dozen languages, and he had a marvellous collection of original naval MSS. and of postage stamps.

'Sir William, who was in receipt of a well-earned Civil List pension, married in 1882 a daughter of Mr. L. F. Edwards.'

The funeral took place from 16 Eversfield Place, St. Leonards-on-Sea, on Friday, August 18, at 12 o'clock noon.

Introductory.

By the united efforts, too, of an energetic and sterling portion of the commercial body, a Life Assurance Society has been incorporated, and now for some few years permanently established. This, if we may judge from its past progress and present prosperous position, bids fair to equal, if not excel, any institution of its class in the United Kingdom. Its managers and officers are all shrewd, matter-of-fact, genuine business men; men of the first respectability, willing to devote a large portion of their time, and to take a warmly active part in administering the affairs of the Society. In this they are so aided by its able and very zealous actuary as to inspire full confidence, and to ensure everything being turned to the best and most profitable account. These advantages, united to the individual and combined exertions of commercial men who act in the capacity of travelling agents, persuading their friends and connections to partake of the blessing which life insurance is so eminently capable of imparting, add weekly, and almost daily to the growing importance of the institution; inducing frugality and abstinence, a relinquishment of frivolous and superfluous expenditure, and thereby diffusing among its members, from the necessity of providing for so laudable a purpose, an economy at once satisfactory and ennobling, calculated to produce a higher state of civilisation, aspirations and ideas more exalted, and reforming, from the centre to the circumference, the entire commercial circle. And thus the minds of the insured will be elevated, from their knowledge of having an interest in the prosperity of a large, well-conducted, and successful public institution. How soothing and how cheering will be the confidence that their survivors are not left unprovided for. This will not fail to constitute an epoch in the commercial world's history well worth recording, and finally establishing for commercial men a name that will reflect credit and honour upon their class throughout all time.

Genuine Specimen of a Commercial Traveller.

Reached Leeds to breakfast, after a twelve miles' drive; and found at my quarters, Mr. Saccharine Worldsend, a fair specimen of the majority of the commercial body. Having breakfasted, and perused the news of the day, he was eagerly scanning the daily communications from his house, with others from his private and business friends, without relaxing a muscle, or evincing, to the most scrutinising observer, by any smile, contortion, change of countenance, or remark, the slightest pleasure or chagrin at their contents. At length, hastily folding them up, and re-arranging his samples as per advice, he was ready for the business of the day; humming, in a very subdued tone, a satisfactory sort of air, the certain indication of a mind at ease. Full of health, apparently rejoicing in his strength, he looked confident of success—of the united ability of himself and his house to realise all his anticipations—and; out he sallied into the town, commencing his avocation with his usual alacrity; his trade appurtenances, his legitimate and illegitimate sweeteners of the bitter cup of life (or strong Bohea) within his grasp: intelligence sparkling in his eye, perseverance stamped on his front, an inflexible firmness in his manner, every citizen knowing his occupation, and all men recognising him, from his fixedness of purpose and businesslike pretensions, to be an eager, zealous, bustling, commercial traveller. Some way or other, there is indeed, to coin a word, an unmistakeableness about our body, see them when and where, and under whatever circumstances you may. By some indescribable peculiarity of bearing and manner, they are all as easily recognised and distinguished from ordinary residents of a town as one sex is distinguishable from another. And Worldsend is not an exception to the rule; for his whole countenance is animated with commerce—illumined with confidence and assurance; ingenuity peering through every glance. His energetic manner, earnest inclination, busy mercantile mien, hale and hearty constitution, seeming to bid defiance to hindrance, difficulty, or exhaustion; and apparently capable, from habitual exercise, operation, and employment, of grappling with and surmounting every obstacle, and rendering perfectly easy that which, to ordinary minds, would seem utterly impracticable. The mass of money which passes through his hands, and the extent of business he transacts, transcend our knowledge; but they are unusually large: yet he has time for everything; a fair judicious division of the day providing him with ample opportunities of enjoyment, and allowing him to hold a cheerful conversation, smoke a light cigar, play a friendly rubber, and, when very strongly solicited, sing (the only one he knows) a jovial hearty song. His lively and vigorous deportment, far from being limited or confined in character, so insinuates itself (being well timed) into all his business transactions as to render him doubly acceptable to his customers, over a dull and stupid dolt. And his honour is as unimpeachable, his word as well received, and his promises are as fully relied upon, in connection with goods exhibited by sample, as though the bulk were present; binding him to his friends by a tie indissoluble. For, being well supported, neither he nor they are often disappointed; and having consequently but few drawbacks to his energies, he commences his business with pleasure, carries it on with vigour, and usually completes it with success; concentrating within himself at the same time the triune essentials of a man of business—not always, unfortunately, so thoroughly amalgamated as desirable—of the Man, the Tradesman, and the Gentleman.

'THE CHIEF LITERARY JOURNAL IN AMERICA.'

FORTY YEARS OF THE 'NATION.'

[For more than fifteen hundred weeks we have enjoyed reading the American Nation, and admired its fearless impartiality in regard to the greater things of this world, especially as regards literary matters. Not always just in its estimate of the policy of England, it at least intends to be just, and it is only fair to admit that if it attacks our 'Imperialism' it is equally severe on the American Republican form of that 'disease,' as it calls it. Anyway, we sincerely believe that its incorrect views on English policy are due entirely to the fact that no outsider can possibly understand it in all its bearings—any more than we can understand all the hidden springs of the policy of the United States. But the Nation is a paper of which Cosmopolis may be proud, and we are glad to see from this acknowledgment that the editor of the Nation is so honoured in his own country.—ED. P. C.]

THE editor of the Nation had not intended to plant a stake on the completion of the fortieth year of this journal with its last issue in June. Least of all a personal stake. The temporal division of the day's work is what chiefly interests him, and always what is before rather than what is behind. Persistency, with him, is in the bone, and on this inheritance of nature he never thought to plume himself. His co-labourers, however, would have it otherwise, and conspired to mark the term by a testimonial which they presented on July 6, the date of the very first issue of the Nation in 1865. An inscribed vase of great beauty was the visible token, and it was accompanied by a congratulatory note signed by more than two hundred of the Nation's staff, some equal veterans with the editor. Had all this been done in a corner, it should so have remained—a matter among friends. But the utter secrecy observed in carrying out the enterprise having been followed by advertisement in the daily press, the editor is reluctantly compelled to share the news with his own readers.

'You have made the Nation,' runs the note, 'for more than a generation the chief literary journal in America—the medium of the best criticism, and the mouthpiece of high intellectual ideals.' Such has, in fact, been my aim, attended let others judge with what success. My disclaimer relates to the degree of individual merit implied. It is true that I put my hand to the plough with the initial number of the Nation and have never let go the ploughtail. It is true, also, that while the literary department was my especial charge, I participated from the beginning as a writer in the political conduct of the paper. What is needful to be pointed out is, that I came to the task an inexperienced youth, and at once entered into pupilage to a great writer and master political moralist, the late Edwin Lawrence Godkin, whom with admiring eyes I saw

Mount in his glorious course on competent wing.

He it was that shaped the framework of the Nation and gave the informing spirit, and drew around him those liberal natures on both sides of the Atlantic who impressed a permanent stamp of authority, ideality, and scholarship on the paper. In the tentative days Mr. Godkin was intimately counselled by Charles Eliot Norton, one of the indispensable founders of the Nation, and still one of its oldest as well as most valued contributors. It was Mr. Norton who penned the note of congratulation which I feel constrained to gloss with due remembrance of the makers of the tradition which it has been my privilege more or less independently for the past twenty-four years to uphold.

Long before the Nation had attained its majority, it had an entity identifiable with no one man. It drew its intellectual and moral support from a great body of enlightened and humane men and women, who became the Nation incarnate. I believe I can confidently appeal to the experience of subscribers and readers—readers always largely in excess of subscribers—in affirming that 'a Nation man' stands for something definite in the social order, and that the paper furnishes a trusty bond of congeniality whenever strangers come together with no other introduction. This is a cheering thought for the editor, but it should not lead him to confound his office of intermediary with the constitution of the real Nation.

The dedicatory inscription on the vase presented to me was written by Goldwin Smith, and speaks of the services rendered to my country by 'forty years of able, upright, and truly patriotic work in the editorship of the Nation.' Such a certificate from such a source is honourable indeed, and I can candidly profess to have been animated by patriotic motives in every line I have ever written for this journal. These motives I was born to, and they proceed from that larger outlook which my father (whose term of editorial labour I have now just equalled) expressed in his Liberator motto, 'My Country is the World, My Countrymen are all Mankind.' They imply not only freedom from provincial narrowness in human sympathy, but a right of clear vision and independent criticism of one's own people, one's own Government. I could ask nothing more than to be found to have derived also from my father the concomitants of his patriotism, 'the modest spirit, the forthright and indomitable temper, heat, and the strong spurning of the vile, and the untrammelled word.'

It does not enter into my purpose to review the fortunes of the Nation in its four decades, nor to discuss its still relative isolation among independent presses. It would but mar a festive occasion to contrast the high, all-embracing philanthropy to which the country seemed dedicated on coming out of the civil war—Lincoln's Gettysburg speech still ringing in our ears—with our present state of shattered republican ideals, our tyrannous subjection of 'inferior' peoples, our all-prevalent militarism. Then, our American reliance was on the force of example, such as Coleridge, not yet disillusioned, anticipated from the French Revolution—

Shall France compel the nations to be free.

Now, we have come down to compelling them to pay their debts and the usurious interest of revolutionary speculators, to govern themselves in accordance with our notions, and to yield the vineyard which we covet.

It remains to thank those who have united in a little-called-for, wholly unexpected tribute of personal esteem and affection from the bottom of my heart. So long as strength endures, I shall endeavour with their aid to perpetuate a journal which has, I believe, no exact parallel in any other country, and whose service has ever been a service of love. It is mine, I repeat, only in name.

TRADE NOTES AND CHANGES.

M. FELIX MARSCHNER, Bookseller, of Cairo, asks us to state that his business has been taken over by M. Heinrich Finck, who will carry it on as F. Diemer, successor to Felix Marschner, Court Bookseller.

Notices of Books

From Messrs. Adam & Charles Black.—'The "Council" Arithmetic for Schools,' by T. B. Ellerby, F.R.G.S., of which Part III. has reached us, is an excellent work, the result apparently of long experience in teaching, and the exercises are cleverly adapted, not only to impress the pupil, but to bring the best part of his mental processes into working order.

From Messrs. Burns & Oates, Ltd.—'Heysham: a Story of North Lancashire in the Thirteenth Century,' by the Right Rev. Mgr. Robert Gradwell. The introductory portion of this volume leads us to think that the author might have written a highly interesting history of Heysham, since the antiquarian features and rural surroundings of the town are so sympathetically touched upon; but we scarcely progress far in his story before we discover that in the art of fiction-weaving he has yet much to learn. The narrative, in which the De Laceys, the De Geslets, the De Hessams, and other local celebrities figure, is wanting in dramatic force, constructive skill, and general breadth of treatment. In short, the book is the work of the student screened from the outside world rather than the writer who has closely associated with his fellows and knows something of their common humanity and failings.

From Messrs. Cassell & Co., Ltd.—'Sewing Machines: their Construction, Adjustment, and Repair.' The Work collection of Handbooks produced under the editorial guidance of Mr. Paul N. Hasluck has now achieved a substantial and well-deserved reputation, and the present addition to their number is assuredly not the least meritorious of the series. It plainly proceeds from a writer who has an intimate and practical knowledge of his subject, while the numerous diagrams in no light measure contribute to the gratifying success obtained.

From Messrs. Archibald Constable & Co., Ltd.—'Some Famous Women of Wit and Beauty: a Georgian Galaxy,' by John Fyvie. The famous women are Mrs. Fitzherbert (the unacknowledged wife of George IV.), Lady Hamilton, Mrs. Montagu, 'the Most Gorgeous Lady Blessington,' Mrs. Lennox (commended by Dr. Johnson, and whose novel, 'The Female Quixote, or the Adventures of Arabella,' is taken by Mr. Fyvie as the basis for his biographical study), Mrs. Grote, the Hon. Mrs. Norton (the real 'Diana of the Crossways'), and Lady Eastlake. About each of these celebrities the author has collected a quantity of gossipy information, and this he retails in an agreeable, unassuming fashion that adds vastly to its interest. We do not know that any particularly fresh light is thrown on the personalities of these distinguished beings in the world of society and art, but we do know that the account of their triumphs and influence proves exceedingly readable and entertaining. We should feel still more grateful to Mr. Fyvie if the portraits in his volume were rather better. But in this matter we quite recognise the difficulties that have beset his path.

From Messrs. E. T. W. Dennis & Sons, Ltd.—'Summer Holidays among the Glories of Northern France: her Cathedrals and Churches,' by T. Francis Bumpus. It will not take the reader of this volume long to find out that he is in the presence of a writer who has paid much attention to ecclesiastical architecture, and whose sympathies are closely bound up with his subject. Those who are of a similar turn of mind will derive great pleasure from accompanying him in this ramble over Northern France, and will appreciate to the full the frequent stoppages to note the magnificent examples of church architecture met by the way. Among these are the cathedrals of Bayeux, Coutances, Chartres, Rouen, Mantes, Meaux, Le Mans, Tours, Bourges, Sens, Troyes, Châlons, Dijon, and Nevers, with numerous others. To Notre-Dame, Paris, Mr. Bumpus naturally devotes exceptional consideration, three of his twenty-six chapters being occupied with this subject, and he gives a short sketch of the history of the edifice. It is all very interesting, very delightful, and, let us add, not oppressively highly toned. The author is even sufficiently human to quote Dickens. In a work of this character no little of its success will depend on the illustrations. They number over one hundred, and are exceeding good, giving force and charm to a volume which in its other characteristics is by no means wanting in attraction.

From Messrs. J. M. Dent & Co.—'The Labyrinth of the World,' edited and Englished by Count Lutzow. Many readers in this country, we have no doubt, will welcome the inclusion of Komensky's great work in the 'Temple Classics,' and that the present edition is well printed, neatly bound, and of a handy size goes without saying. The innovation of placing what is practically the introductory matter at the end of the volume is, we think, a mistake.

From the same.—'The Talisman,' by Sir Walter Scott, edited with Biographical Introduction, Notes, and a Glossary by George L. Turnbull, M.A. We have before pointed out in these columns that none of Scott's novels, not even excepting 'Ivanhoe,' have such romantic, chivalrous charm for the youngster as 'The Talisman.' It is full of exciting episodes likely to enthral the ardent imagination, from beginning to end, and the career of the 'Knight of the Leopard,' to say nothing of the fascinating personalities of Richard and Saladin, are calculated to appeal with irresistible force to impetuous boyhood. Our own memories of the enjoyment we experienced in days long ago causes us almost to resent Mr. Turnbull's editorial interference with the text; but if the work of simplification had to be done in order to render the book more suitable for use in schools and colleges, we must at least willingly admit that it could scarcely have been performed by more sympathetic hands. Another commendable feature is that the introductory matter, embracing some particulars of the novelist's life and the character of the book, is kept within reasonable bounds, and the Notes (illustrated) are short and to the purpose.

From the Funk & Wagnalls Company.—'The Church of Christ,' by 'A Layman.' The author of this volume exhibits an amount of self-confidence which a little detracts from the effect of his argument. He it is who is to set the whole religious world right and point out the error of previous conceptions. It is obvious, he writes, that several hundred churches, denominations, sects, and parties in Christendom cannot all be right. 'They may all be wrong, but no two of them can be right if Christ's Church was a unit and divisions were forbidden by the statement: "That there be no divisions among you." Two men cannot differ about any fact or truth and both be right; about any inspired command and obedience to it; about any divine ordinance and its observance; about officers under Christ and their duties, and both be right, any more than they can differ about the fact that the sun shines by day and the moon by night and both be right.' We have been reminded of Mr. Gradgrind, that imposing personality put forward by Charles Dickens, when reading these lines. It is therefore the design of this volume, the author goes on to say, 'to unfold the simple truth in regard to the Church of Christ, both in faith and practice.' Undoubtedly there are many unconventional views propounded, much courage of conviction displayed, in 'A Layman's' work; but its lack of sympathy—we had almost said sentiment—will considerably operate, we are afraid, against its success in this country. The reasoning is too much hammered out.

From the same.—'Parisians out of Doors,' by F. Berkeley Smith. This is a lively, captivating book, if scarcely so sparkling and vivacious as the character of the subject demands. It requires a French writer, so delicate and suggestive in his touches, to do full justice to the frivolities of Parisian life. However, Mr. Berkeley Smith has succeeded as well as most members of the stolid English-speaking races could probably do. He describes with great relish, among other things, the fascination of a Parisian Sunday, seaside life at Trouville, the habits of the Bohemian, and the attractions of Monte Carlo. Throughout he is aided by a number of spirited, piquant illustrations, and it is upon these, coupled with the showy production of the work, that its sale will chiefly depend. Like so many American goods, it is a volume that appeals rather to the eye than to the head.

From Messrs. Gale & Polden, Ltd.—'Aids to Skirmishing—Corrected up to Date and in Accordance with the Latest Infantry Training.' Skirmishing occupies a very important place in military operations, and as it is now entered among the subjects of the recruit's early training its study is a matter of necessity. This little work will be found to convey a maximum of information in a minimum of space, and the practical instructions of the text are most usefully supplemented by a number of diagrams showing how the movements are executed.

From Messrs. Wells Gardner, Darton & Co., Ltd.—'The Piskey Purse: Legends and Tales of North Cornwall,' by Enys Tregarthen. The 'little people' of Cornwall would seem to be divisible, broadly speaking, like their bigger brethren, into two classes, the good and the bad. Among the former are the Piskeys, merry little folk up to all manner of mischief; while the latter include the Spiggans, a hateful race, spiteful in their tendencies and contemptible lovers of money. It is curious, however, that the mind, as a rule, inclines to the association of a malevolent nature with the dwarf body, and of such a character is the old lady of this volume, who, in the traditional steeple hat, plays with the children at the game of 'The Witch in the Well,' and eventually ends by imprisoning all the poor little things—with one exception, the 'mother'—in an upper apartment of her castle, whence they are only rescued after a most surprising series of fairy-like incidents. This story is a fair sample of the others, four in number, and they may generally be pronounced of a character that will cause children's eyes to become round in awe, and even to impress their superstitiously inclined seniors. The volume is very daintily illustrated—especially in the smaller pictures—by Mr. J. Ley Pethybridge, who, we understand, is a Cornishman by birth, and therefore takes to his task con amore.

From Messrs. Hodder & Stoughton.—'The Westminster Booklets,' a series of short addresses by the Rev. G. Campbell Morgan, of Westminster Chapel, is auspiciously inaugurated by 'To Die is Gain' and 'The Fulfilment of Life.' The neat and rather novel form of these little works, it seems to us, is likely to prove a more effective factor in their success than either the eloquence or argumentative force of the contents, considerable though these be.

From the Independent Labour Party, 10 Red Lion Court, E.C.—'Socialism and Society,' by J. Ramsay Macdonald. Though we are far from agreeing with Mr. Macdonald in many of his opinions, it is impossible not to recognise the earnestness, the painstaking effort, and honest conviction he has incorporated with his work. This is a treatise that we may warmly advise every student of social economics to read. It is not so much that it is particularly weighty in itself, but that it reveals to the thoughtful the other side of the question and shows the direction in which public opinion moves. After all, the man is a fool who wraps himself up warm in his own narrow-minded convictions, and refuses to give heed to the lessons, unpalatable though they may be, taught by outside events. Even from the mouths of our opponents it is possible to derive wisdom.

From Mr. T. Werner Laurie.—'The Cathedrals of England and Wales,' by T. Francis Bumpus. First Series. Mr. Laurie has already issued two scholarly volumes dealing with the cathedrals of France, and these are now followed by the first of two volumes on the cathedrals of our own country. The first chapter, which deals concisely but adequately with the history of church architecture, should prove of the greatest interest to readers who have not previously studied the matter to some extent. Subsequent chapters deal with the cathedrals of Durham, Ely, Lincoln, Salisbury, Worcester, Hereford, Chichester, Chester, and Bristol. The author deals fully with each in turn, and has consulted a considerable number of works, of which he gives a list at the end of the volume. There is also an index, which adds greatly to its value as a useful book of reference. In a book of this character the illustrations are of scarcely less importance than the descriptive text, and for the photographs in this volume we have only the highest praise: the interiors are really remarkable.

From Mr. John Long.—'A Lost Cause,' by Guy Thorne. The recent novel 'When it was Dark,' by this author, has been so successful that a new work from the same pen is sure of many readers. In this new volume, under the guise of a novel the author presents a striking and vivid picture of the so-called Protestant campaign against Ritualism in the Church of England which recently caused so much disturbance, and which has now apparently died down to very small dimensions. 'A Lost Cause' is primarily a novel with a strong plot and love interest, and the reader's attention is held all through, whether or not he sympathises with its object. The author claims that his incidents are all founded on recent facts; and although he disclaims any attempt at portraiture of real persons, there is no doubt that the majority of his readers will accept Mr. Hamlyn as being intended for the late Mr. Kensit. Novels with a purpose—at all events, with a religious purpose—do not often appeal to the ordinary novel reader; but this is certainly one of the exceptions, and as it is certain to be widely discussed in church circles of every denomination, it is sure of a very large circulation.

From Messrs. Marshall Brothers.—'St. Luke, the Ideal Man: a Series of Studies in the Third Gospel,' by the Rev. A. E. Barnes-Lawrence, M.A. In the six chapters constituting this little volume the author successively takes as his theme 'The Writer and his Gospel,' 'The General Characteristics of the Gospel,' 'The Incarnation and Early Years,' 'The Preparation for Public Ministry,' 'The Ideal Man,' and 'The Kingdom of God.' He is careful to point out that he has made no endeavour to analyse the Gospel as a whole, but, mindful of St. Luke's main purpose, only that part of it in which he narrates our Lord's Birth and Early Years up to the commencement of His public ministry. Several analytical tables, giving the passages and incidents, parables, and miracles peculiar to St. Luke are included.

From the Messenger Office, Wimbledon.—'The Organist of Laumant, and other Stories,' by David Bearne, S.J. The initial story of this volume relates to Noël Lesarge, the only son of a widow, whose husband, a regimental bandmaster, was slain in the Franco-German war. The boy, who is left in charge of M. Sibilet, the Curé of Laumant, had early given evidence that he possessed the 'gift of song,' which is fostered by his guardian, until Noel gains the reputation of a rising Church composer, and subsequently secures the cherished privilege of being enabled to play the organ in Notre-Dame Cathedral. The development of this story is capably conceived, and in conjunction with 'Benoit's Denis' and the others makes up a most interesting book.

From Mr. Alexander Moring (The De La More Press).—'Thought Transference, a Critical and Historical Review of the Evidence for Telepathy, with a Record of New Experiments, 1902-1903,' and 'Crystal Gazing, its History and Practice,' &c., &c., by Northcote W. Thomas, M.A. These volumes form the first portion of a proposed series of works in which the author will 'discuss Psychical Research, as well as deal critically but sympathetically with the evidence.' The endeavour will also be made to furnish the inquirer with a clearly written account of some of the wonderful results to be found in alliance with this special realm of thought. A fair proportion of the second-mentioned book (which contains a special Introduction contributed by Andrew Lang) relates to the history of wonder-working mirrors and crystal gazing known to the Greek, Roman, Egyptian, Persian, and Arabic nations, as well as those existing during the Middle Ages. The more recent developments of these astonishing and phenomenal manifestations are described throughout in a manner that even the ordinary reader is made clearly cognisant of many of the mysterious influences surrounding us in our daily pilgrimage, and exemplify Hamlet's trite saying to Horatio, 'there are more things in Heaven and earth than are dreamt of in your philosophy.' Those who are desirous of knowing the trend of these perplexing theories we would refer to the books themselves.

From Mr. John Murray.—'The Diary of a Girl in France in 1821,' by Mary Browne, with illustrations by herself, edited by Commander the Hon. H. N. Shore, R.N. The writer of this diary was a girl of fourteen only, when with her parents, brothers and sisters, she made the visit recorded to Paris and Versailles. Going to Paris was in those days a real journey, and the French had not learnt to cater for English and American tastes, while the English girls and boys, and their parents too, were steadfastly resolved that there was nothing good in anything foreign. To say that the book and its drawings are quaint is to give but a faint idea of the amusement to be derived from its perusal; the child writer, so precocious at times, and at others so naïve, portrays herself even more clearly than the incidents and people she encounters. The book is full of interest.

From Mr. David Nutt.—'James Macpherson: an Episode in Literature,' by J. S. Smart. This practically is the story of an exploded imposture. For years Macpherson enjoyed a fame to which he was little entitled, and the 'Poems of Ossian,' about a century ago, were the rage, not only in this country but on the continent. The verses were supposed to have the quality of antiquity. Leading scholars discussed their merits and eagerly lauded their beauty. The only man who does not seem to have been deceived was Dr. Johnson. Asked whether any modern man could have written such poems, he replied with his usual curtness, 'Yes, sir, many men, many women, and many children.' Afterwards, of course, it was found by the light of greater research into Gaelic literature where the source of Macpherson's inspiration lay, and that the poems were actually modern; but even to this day, Mr. Smart points out, the belief that Ossian is one of the glories of English literature lingers over the continent. On the other hand, Macpherson undeniably had merit of his own, and it is well not to lose sight of this. To readers of a reflective literary turn of mind Mr. Smart's volume may be warmly commended, and in it they will find an interesting account of one of the most remarkable deceptions ever practised in the world of letters.

From Messrs. Passmore & Alabaster.—'A Marvellous Ministry: the Story of C. H. Spurgeon's Sermons, 1855 to 1905,' by Charles Ray. The consecutive weekly issue of one man's sermons for half a century, with the possession of additional manuscripts sufficient to continue the publication for some years, is certainly a matter that calls for some form of celebration, and in this volume Mr. Ray tells with a laudation that is pardonable the history of the Metropolitan Tabernacle pulpit. The book is illustrated.

From Messrs. Relfe Brothers, Ltd.—'Poppyland' and 'Princess Viola,' by Ettie F. Mosely. In efficient hands these little 'Plays for Home and School' can be turned, we have little doubt, to good use; and though not remarkable for any great dexterity or strength of plot, they will probably satisfy all the requirements of young people.

From Messrs. Geo. Routledge & Sons, Ltd.—'Preludes and Symphonies,' by Oliver Grey. Mr. Grey has every quality but one that makes for literary fame; he has scholarship, literary feeling, dexterity and charm, but he has not a spark of genius. However, it were churlish to upbraid him for a deficiency for which he is not responsible, and we must confess that we have derived considerable enjoyment from his refined and graceful verse. Unlike most modern poets, he gives of himself in generous measure, his talent being unusually prolific. His facility and dexterity are remarkable, and the thought expressed is fanciful and delicate.

From the Walter Scott Publishing Co., Ltd. 'William Hogarth,' by G. Baldwin Brown, M.A., illustrated with twenty plates and a photogravure portrait. We have already spoken highly of several volumes of the 'Makers of British Art' series, and we are pleased to welcome this volume as equal to its predecessors. The half-tone blocks are carefully produced and well printed, while the letterpress gives an ample biography and description of the artist and his times.

From Mr. Charles J. Thynne. — 'Homely Rhymes on some Church Questions,' by 'A Layman.' This particular layman has Broad Church views on matters of ritual, and he has expressed his opinion in rhymes that have neither literary finish nor appositeness to recommend them. It is possible to sympathise with his feelings and ideas without deriving any pleasure from his verses.

From Messrs. Ward, Lock & Co., Ltd.— 'Tommy Carteret,' by Justus Miles Forman. Candidly, we are disappointed in this novel. With a vivid remembrance of the author's previous work, 'The Garden of Lies,' in our mind we had expected something better. Not by any means that the story is wanting in attraction. The charm of Mr. Forman's romantic faculty, the freshness of his treatment, and the skill shown in depicting dramatic situations, are prominent as ever, and the narrative has a force and buoyant value which we are sure will carry the reader, as it has done us, to the last page. But, as we have said, we had expected more from the book—such is the penalty entailed by a pronounced success—and in view of this expectation we are painfully conscious of the lack of constructive ability, the crudely improbable situations, and the resuscitation of material that has long served its turn. The plot is soon told. Tommy Carteret has a father who, like the central figure in the late Charles Matthews's play, 'My Awful Dad,' is volatile and youthful beyond his years. After enjoying a wonderful immunity for many years, he at length gets into a scrape with a married woman. The blame falls upon Tommy, who, in order to save the family from disgrace, though in love with a beautiful girl himself, goes heroically to exile in some outlandish place, the whereabouts of which is not exactly stated, but which we take to be in South America. Here he meets with another girl, a native, far beneath him in station, and, again supremely heroic, proposes to marry her. Fate, however, represented by a vindictive father and a disappointed rival, interposes. News at this momentous epoch arrives that the injured husband in England has been laid low with heart disease, and all obstacles to Tommy's return, so far as this entanglement are concerned, is over. Unfortunately, other distressing features make themselves apparent which greatly endanger the happiness of the parties chiefly concerned, but these are eventually set right. The most effectively drawn characters in the story are the handsome debonair father—a weak man with charming manners, for whom all the women have a sentimental partiality—and a shrewd old lady who has a wonderful insight into the affairs of her neighbours.

From the same.—'The New Minister,' by Orme Agnus. Mr. Agnus would probably be surprised to learn that his new book was likely to prove seriously offensive to men of thoughtful minds. He has treated of human nature, and he has done his best for it; but the pictures are false, the setting unreal. Men and women are not all kindly and sweet, with just a little obstinacy and uncharitableness thrown in. Has Mr. Angus read 'The House with the Green Shutters'? That book, exaggerated as it is, is to our minds a closer presentation of human life than these charming rustic creatures with their big virtues and small faults. The Love Feast incident, with Ben Gorely as the central character, is radically false. Only people wrapped up in a thousand conventional falsities will really admire Mr. Agnus's work.

From Messrs. Frederick Warne & Co.— 'The Conquering Will,' by Silas K. Hocking. We scarcely think this is the best of Mr. Hocking's stories we are acquainted with. Simplicity of detail is apparent as of old, but in the present instance it is carried to an extreme that savours of the utterly commonplace. Here is a conversation occurring on the arrival of the hero, a young, comparatively unknown artist, at the country house of a magnate whose daughter's portrait he has received a commission to paint. The magnate rushes to the door when the artist arrives and himself escorts him to his bedroom. The following highly intellectual conversation then takes place: 'You need not dress for dinner unless you like . . . You smoke, I presume?' 'I do a little.' 'That's right; I like people to smoke. I always think they are more sociable.' 'I fear artists generally smoke,' Basil said. 'Yes, I am told that is so—sad slaves to the weed, I hear. I don't agree with too much smoking you know; but a cigar after dinner I think has a very nice influence upon a man—it helps to soothe him, and make him sociable; don't you think so?' 'I believe a cigar does contribute somewhat to sociability,' Basil said, with a laugh. 'But too much smoking gets on the nerves, and nerves are troublesome things when they get out of order.' 'Yes, I believe that is so,' Basil answered. There is a vast amount of this sort of talk in the story, and remarkably little plot to speak of. The author's ignorance of social etiquette is exceedingly apparent, and even his Church of England clergyman has all the semblance, so far as manners and conversation go, of a Dissenter. Yet there are many passages which evince genuine power, and give the impression that Mr. Hocking might do much better if he chose.

From Messrs. F. V. White & Co., Ltd. —'His Better Half,' by George Griffith. The title of this novel is a little deceptive, seeing that it suggests entertainment of an ordinary domestic order. But those acquainted with Mr. Griffith's previous writings will know that the conventional is about the last thing to be expected from him. Accordingly the present story proves in no way less engrossing than its predecessors. It concerns events of military life in India shortly before the celebrated march to Kandahar, and along its course picturesque detail, native superstition, and daring deeds are so dexterously interwoven as to make the narrative thoroughly absorbing. The title of the story proceeds from the circumstance that though the hero, Captain Derek Ferrers, is endowed with invincible obstinacy and pluck, his mental gifts are scarcely of that quality which would bring him great professional success were it not for the diplomacy and long-headedness of his wife. In other words, he is one of those brave simple-hearted fellows whom the women all like and are impelled to take care of. And in Mrs. Ferrers's case no one can say that she did not perform her task well and to her own complete happiness.

From Mr. Effingham Wilson.—'Two Friends of Old England: Mirabeau and Gambetta,' by 'Saxo-Norman' (Arthur Pavitt and Albert Yvelin, Baron de Béville). Mirabeau's appreciation of this country is now a matter of history, and Gambetta's sympathies were scarcely less marked. The reader will gather from this little volume much regarding the two men that is interesting, though possibly it might have been conveyed in more finished style. The book comes at an opportune moment, when the entente cordiale is so enthusiastically spoken about.

From Messrs. Frederick W. Wilson & Co., Glasgow.—'Droll Glasgow, or the Humours of Life in St. Mungo,' by Eric Falconer. As often happens with books of this description the use of the vernacular is largely responsible for its success, such as it is. Strange, is it not, that an observation quite ordinary, not to say puerile, when couched in pure English, should acquire positive humorous force when expressed in the Scottish, Lancashire, or other dialect language. In his efforts to amuse readers, Mr. Falconer has been assisted by an artist whose powers are about on an equal level, Mr. D. Broadfoot Carter. Only people in the first stages of humorous perception, we are afraid, can be advised to purchase this volume.

NEW EDITIONS AND REPRINTS.—Messrs. Hutchinson & Co. have sent us 'The Adventures of Ferdinand Count Fathom,' by Tobias Smollett, the new volume of their 'Classic Novels.' It is well printed and attractively produced, and many will be glad to have this amusing record of a scoundrel in this cheap form.—Mr. Horace Cox sends us a second edition of 'Chess Openings,' by James Mason, a treatise, and an able one, for those who are already chess players, or, at least, are acquainted with the rudiments of the game. It is not remarkable that a second edition has been called for.

The Health Resorts Bureau have sent us the thirteenth edition of their very comprehensive and popular handbook to the 'Health Resorts of Europe,' compiled as heretofore by Thomas Linn, M.D. (of Nice and Geneva), and edited by A. C. Glynn Grylls, M.A., F.R.G.S.

We have been favoured by Mr. John Murray with a copy of his new choice pocket edition of George Borrow's memorable book, 'The Bible in Spain,' and in its newer form the fascinating narrative will doubtless obtain a wider circle of readers.

We have received from Messrs. Jarrold & Sons a copy of Elisabeth Boyd Baily's timely book named, 'Truth, Unity, and Concord: Thoughts on the Question of Religious Education in our Day Schools,' and it is a startling statement of the spiritual needs of the junior portion of the community throughout the country.

We have received from Messrs. Hodder & Stoughton a copy of Mrs. Ashley Carus-Wilson's 'Saint Paul, Missionary to the Nations.' The book is a carefully arranged summary for the study of the great Evangelist's life and writings.

PUBLICATIONS OF THE WEEK.

WITH AN INDEX OF AUTHORS, TITLES, AND SUBJECTS OF BOOKS IN ONE ALPHABET.

All books are in cloth when not otherwise described. When the word 'net' is printed against the price of a book it means that there is not the usual trade allowance. The words of the Index which are printed in italics refer to the name under which the title of a work appears in larger type. Publishers who observe the omission of a book from the list will confer a favour by sending a copy of the title to the office for insertion in the next number.

SUSAN CLEGG
ANNE WARNER

SUSAN CLEGG:
AND HER FRIEND, MRS. LATHROP.

By ANNE WARNER.

Crown 8vo. 3*s*. 6*d*.

In a Prefatory Note the author says: The first four chapters of 'Susan Clegg: and her Friend, Mrs. Lathrop' appeared in The Century Magazine as separate stories during the past year. They have been revised and partly rewritten for book publication, and 'The Minister's Vacation,' never before printed, has been added.

SPEAKER.—'The volume is one which no lover of genuine, unstrained, kindly humour can afford to pass by.

SCOTSMAN.—'Undeniably funny. The book contains the material for hearty laughter.'

EVENING STANDARD.—'Laughable from beginning to end. Susan Clegg has every right to stand beside David Harum and Mrs. Wiggs as a specimen of one very racy kind of American humour.'

MORNING LEADER.—'Miss Clegg has the manner of Mr. Dooley and the morals of Mrs. Wiggs. . . . Full of concentrated essence of laughter.'

MY LADY LAUGHTER.

By DWIGHT TILTON.

A Romance of Boston Town in the Days of the Great Siege.

With ten beautiful Illustrations in Tricolour by CHARLES H. STEVENS. Cloth extra, gilt top, decorative cover, 6*s*.

Included among its characters are George Washington, John Hancock, Samuel Adams, Joseph Warren, Paul Revere, and many others who fought to save Boston in 1775.

WORLD.—'An admirable romance, spirited, exciting, sympathetic. My Lady Laughter herself is one of the most attractive heroines who ever brightened the pages of modern romance.'

BOOKMAN.—'There is plenty of fighting, a sufficiency of good wholesome love-making, and enough hair breadth escapes to satisfy the most exacting.'

JUST READY.

THE BLACK BARQUE.

By T. JENKINS HAINS, Author of 'The Wind-Jammers.'

With Five Illustrations by W. HERBERT DUNTON. Cloth extra, gilt top, decorative cover design, 6*s*.

According to a high naval authority who has seen the advance sheets, this is one of the best sea stories ever offered to the public. 'The Black Barque' is a story of slavery and piracy upon the high seas about 1815, and is written with a thorough knowledge of deep-water sailing. This, Captain Hain's first long sea story, realistically pictures a series of stirring scenes at the period of the destruction of the exciting but nefarious traffic in slaves, in the form of a narrative by a young American lieutenant, who, by force of circumstances, finds himself in the gunner's berth of 'The Black Barque.' The clear-cut characterisations of the picturesque types of the various nationalities found among the officers and crew of a slaver of the day is not one of the least interesting features of the story.

CASTEL DEL MONTE.

By NATHAN GALLIZIER.

With Six Illustrations by H. C. EDWARDS. Cloth extra, gilt top, decorative cover design, 6*s*.

By KATHLEEN WATSON.

Third Edition. Crown 8vo. cloth, extra gilt top, price 2*s.* 6*d.* net.

'"Litanies of Life," by Kathleen Watson, is a little book containing five short stories, but every one of them is worth reading, and the note of all sounds sweet and true. The reader will lay down the book, as I did, with a feeling of profound sympathy and gratitude to the writer, in whose pages they can hear the tremulous throb of an intense emotion, which, however, does not obscure the finer and stronger note of heroic resolve.'—W. T. Stead.

THREE LITTLE GARDENERS

By AGNES J. TALBOT.

Twenty-six Illustrations by Miss GERTRUDE M. BRADLEY.

A Diary of twelve months' work in a child's garden. A delightful little book of fun, frolic, and work by busy little hands and active brains. Coloured frontispiece. Square 8vo. cloth gilt, price 2*s.* 6*d.* net.

SIX-SHILLING NOVELS.

Crown 8vo. cloth gilt.

THE LADY NAVIGATORS. By Edward Noble, Author of 'The Edge of Circumstance.' [Ready early in September.

Mr. Noble's work has been compared by the critics with that of Rudyard Kipling and Joseph Conrad. His new book is another story of the sea, displaying a delightfully humorous element that should win the author many new admirers.

THE BENEFACTOR. By Ford Madox Hueffer. [Early in September.

An admirable piece of character drawing. The literary quality of the style is that of a true artist, and the story is interesting from the first page to the last. We confidently anticipate that this will prove one of the most widely read novels of the year.

LIEUTENANT GULLIVER JONES. By Edwin Lester Arnold. [Early in September.

The author of 'Phra, the Phœnician' gives us here the adventures of a resourceful American sailor in the planet Mars. Although Mr. Arnold's Martians have little in common with the weird creations of Mr. H. G. Wells, his book holds the reader from start to finish, and has the advantage of possessing a strong love interest.

AMERICAN PUBLISHERS' FIGHT AGAINST THE UNDERSELLERS.

THE Bookselling Trade in the United States is watching with great interest the progress of the fight against underselling. As our readers are aware, the latest decision of an American judge is against the principle for which the American publishers and the great majority of the booksellers are contending—viz., that if a bookseller refuses not to undersell he is to be supplied by members of the Association only at full retail price. We are glad to see that it appears to be the general opinion in the trade on the other side of the Atlantic that what is called Judge Ray's 'narrow and technical application of the copyright law' will not be sustained by the Federal Courts of Appeals. Judge Ray sits in 'the lowest United States Court,' and when things get to the highest it is expected that more reasonable views will prevail.

The American Publishers' Association, acting very promptly after the recent decision, issued two circulars on the subject—one to the trade and one to the public—containing strong presentations of the present legal status of the 'Reform movement,' as so far determined in what are known as the Macy suits, and of the Association's position in the matter. The essential points are these:

2. The decision as to how far this power extends is yet to be finally decided. In the patent case of the Victor Talking Machine, the Federal Court of Appeals in Illinois held that the right of a proprietor to control prices extends to the ultimate buyer, while Judge Ray, of the Federal Circuit Court of New York, a court one degree lower than the other, has held that the final control of price cannot be implied under the copyright law by a notice on the part of the seller, and must be a question of contractual relation between the publisher and the retailer.

3. The American Publishers' Association does not 'fix prices,' and it is not a trust. It was decided in the New York Court of Appeals that it could not protect prices on non-copyright books, and the Association has withdrawn from that field, and modified its plans accordingly; but this opinion of Judge Parker and his associates specifically indicated that the Association had a right to protect the prices of copyright books under its plan, and the obiter dictum of Judge Ray to the contrary is of less authority than the former decision.

The Association has its strong belief that the opinion of Judge Parker, and not that of Judge Ray, will prevail when the question is finally tested in the Courts of last resort. In the face of numerous mistakes, the book trade should feel assured, and should assure customers, that the citadel of the reform plan has not been successfully attacked, and in every essential point it is likely to be upheld and fulfilled.

In their circular to the American public the American publishers give these interesting particulars:

'It has been the practice of certain stores of advertising and selling at cost or even less certain publications of which the prices were well known in order to attract customers to their stores and sell them other articles on which a handsome profit could be made. One store prominent in New York had for years been accustomed to sell a popular thirty-five cent magazine at twenty-four or twenty-five cents a copy, although the store regularly purchased it in large quantities at twenty-eight cents a copy—an actual loss of three or four cents being sustained on each copy sold. New copyrighted books were sold in the same manner, and for the same purpose, accompanied by the advertisement that "the saving on books to our patrons is much less than the saving of all other lines of merchandise." To persons acquainted with the facts the object of this advertising is apparent. It is intended to attract the public to this store in order to sell at a profit other lines of merchandise of which the legitimate price is not generally known. Profits realised on the latter class of goods must of necessity more than counterbalance the loss sustained by the former class, since it is evident that no store can sell all goods at cost and not become bankrupt.

'While not directly affecting the publishers who receive their wholesale prices for all books sold, the effect of this cut-throat business in the trade was demoralising and disastrous. One cut of the kind led to others in self-defence or retaliation, until every holiday season saw half the dealers of the country selling certain books at practically no profit or even at a loss. Very few of the booksellers or department stores, however, themselves believed in this questionable practice or desired its continuance, and, with very few exceptions, they were prepared to co-operate, and they have done so most cordially, with the American Publishers' Association, in its endeavours to stop this manifest abuse and enable all dealers to make a living profit, instead of treating books simply as an advertising medium.

'But we have not endeavoured to accomplish our object by a "Trust," or by any combination or regulations to which there can be any legal or reasonable objection. We do not fix prices, as has been erroneously reported. On the contrary, every publisher fixes his own prices and manages his own business, the efforts of the Association being merely to help him maintain the price which he has fixed.

'One large department store has, however, from the beginning, steadily opposed the movement, and its proprietors at once began a suit against the Association on the ground that it was a combination in restraint of trade. This case was duly carried up to the Court of Appeals of the State of New York, which, in a decision handed down in February, 1904, by Judge Parker, declared that we were entirely within our rights in endeavouring thus to maintain the prices of copyrighted books published by our members. Indeed, it was held by this Court that "public policy commends the conduct of business in such a way as to serve all consumers alike."

'The recent decision by Judge Ray in the Circuit Court was on the application of two individual publishers, who were endeavouring to go a step further, to obtain an injunction legally restraining the underseller from selling copyrighted books at cut rates. This, it should be noted, the Association has never attempted to do. The most its members have ever done has been simply to decline to sell to dealers who will not maintain prices, which, under the decision above quoted, publishers have a clear right to do. The question as to the right of the publisher of a copyrighted book to regulate its price, or Judge Ray's decision on this point, has therefore nothing to do with the status of the American Publishers' Association. We may say, however, that this matter has not as yet been by any means definitely decided. We learn that it is the intention of the individual publishers at once to appeal the case, and since it has been repeatedly held that copyrights are upon practically the same basis as patents, and as the right of the owners of patents thus to control prices has been definitely affirmed by the United States Court, we are quite positive that this same Court will yet decide this question in the publishers' favour.'

NOTES AND ANNOUNCEMENTS.

Messrs. Methuen have been very successful with their new fiction this year, most of their works going into second and third impressions soon after publication, and this at a time when novels are said to be a drug in the market.

Two important works on education will be published next month by the Cambridge University Press—viz., 'Roman Education,' by Dr. A. S. Wilkins, Professor of Classical Literature at Victoria University, Manchester, and 'Pioneers of Modern Education, 1600–1700,' by Professor J. W. Adamson, Professor of Education in King's College.

The illustrated weekly journal, entitled the Garden Home, published by C. J. Culliford & Sons, of 40 Whetstone Park, Lincoln's Inn Fields, London, W.C., is a most useful and instructive paper for amateur gardeners and anybody interested in bees, poultry, or the rearing of animals in a small way. It is very well illustrated, and, besides being instructive and practical, it contains an instalment of a good serial story each week.

Mr. John Lane is publishing on August 29 'The Singing of the Future,' by D. Ffrangcon-Davies, with an Introduction by Sir Edward Elgar and a photogravure portrait of the author. The cultivation of the voice is a subject about which a great variety of opinions exist. Each 'voice producer,' as many name themselves, has his or her own pet method. Mr. Ffrangcon-Davies, as one of our leading singers, must be listened to as an authority, for his own popularity is the best guarantee as to the efficacy of his precepts.

The same date has finally been fixed for the issue of a reprint of Edward Fitzgerald's 'Euphranor' in the 'New Pocket Library,' with an Introduction by Frederic Chapman.

Mr. W. S. Maxwell has achieved an immediate success with his new novel 'Vivien,' which promises to be one of the most popular books of 1905. The first edition was sold out a few days after publication, and the demand is unusually strong.

The series of 'Books in Miniature,' published by Messrs. Treherne & Co., are well known. The sales of these little volumes have steadily increased, and a quarter of a million copies have now been sold. The first volume, a reprint of the first edition of Fitzgerald's translation of 'The Rubaiyat of Omar Khayyam,' was issued in May 1903, and a fifth impression (fortieth thousand) is now ready.

'My friend the Chauffeur,' by Mrs. and Mr. Williamson, is a romance of the automobile which was issued by Messrs. Methuen & Co. on August 24. A young Englishman who has lost all at Monte Carlo except his courage and his motor-car undertakes to conduct parties of ladies for an excursion on the Continent of Europe. An interesting trio of ladies accept his escort and that of his friend, and the party of five start on a tour which leads from the Riviera to Montenegro, with many amusing and exciting incidents on the way. There are sixteen illustrations.

We are glad to say that the movement to present a testimonial to Mr. Walter Wellsman on the occasion of the Diamond Jubilee of his 'Newspaper Press Directory'—that invaluable guide to the press of the United Kingdom—is being well responded to. A first list of supporters, published in the Athenæum, includes the names of more than a hundred of the leading members of the journalistic world. It is proposed that the presentation be made at a banquet; particulars can be had of the hon. sec., Mr. Wm. Wilkie Jones, 13 Bream's Buildings, E.C.

Messrs. Skeffington will publish in September a Life of Angélique Arnauld, Abbess of Port Royal. The book will have two illustrations.

'The Copper Mines of Lake Superior' is the title of a work by T. A. Rickard, published by the Engineering and Mining Journal, London.

'A London Girl,' the first of a series of short novels to be known as 'Tales from the Great City,' will be published on Wednesday, August 30, by Mr. Alston Rivers. The author, who contends that London is the undiscovered country of fiction, prefers for the moment to preserve his anonymity, but it is understood that his previous literary work has made his name familiar to a very wide circle of readers.

Messrs. Methuen are to publish at once 'Knock at a Venture,' Mr. Eden Phillpotts's new book, which is a continuation of his work on Dartmoor. It happens by accident rather than design that the principal story is a tragedy, while most of the other records touch lighter themes, and not a few are purely humorous.

Messrs. Methuen are also issuing a 'Motor Year Book,' which contains many illustrations and diagrams. The work contains a review of the developments in the motor industry and motoring of the past year. It has a full account of the great shows, and every new invention is described. It contains a long chapter dealing with the mechanical and general developments of the industry, another chapter on the tri-car, and a highly important chapter on the laws affecting motoring by Mr. A. Moresby White, a well-known authority on the subject. The last portion of the book is given up to full descriptions, with many illustrations, of all the important types of motor in existence, and this will be found a very valuable section of the book.

Mr. David Graham Phillips' novel of love and city life, 'The Cost,' has been the 'best seller' in the United States for many months past. The scenes on the Stock Exchange and money market are said to be full of sensational and dramatic situations. Mr. Werner Laurie has just printed a large English edition of the book, and will issue it during the month.

It is not generally known that 'Hubert,' whose articles in the Sunday Chronicle have for sixteen years appealed to readers of all classes in the North and in the Midlands, is identical with Mr. Hubert Bland, the well-known London critic and journalist and one of the founders of the Fabian Society. For many years his readers have bombarded him with letters urging him to reprint some of these essays, and he has decided to issue a volume of them entitled 'With the Eyes of a Man.' The book 'has an extraordinary variety of style and also of subject. It contains light dialogues on Love, serious papers on Science, and strong fresh criticisms on social subjects and the Art of Life.' Mr. T. Werner Laurie will be the publisher.

Messrrs. A. R. Mowbray & Co., Ltd., announce that they will publish on September 4 next 'Dean Church,' by D. C. Lathbury, and 'Bishop Wilberforce,' by Mr. R. G. Wilberforce, which form the first two volumes of 'Leaders of the Church, 1800–1900,' edited by Mr. George W. E. Russell.

An important work on International Law will be published by Mr. Unwin on August 28. The authors are Mr. F. C. Smith, B.C.L., Fellow of Merton College, Oxford, and Mr. N. W. Sibley, L.L.M., and the title is 'International Law as Interpreted during the Russo-Japanese War.' The book embraces all the questions of law which have arisen during the war, and deals at length with the subjects of the detention and destruction of neutral vessels, the practice of blockade, the right of search, mines in mid-ocean, wireless telegraphy, contraband, and international arbitration. Apart from its interest to students of law, the volume is likely to be of importance to shippers and merchants.

On the 31st instant Messrs. Harper & Brothers will publish a new novel by R. K. Weekes entitled 'The Fall of the Cards.' The story presents the career of a gambler, and we are promised an exciting and unexpected climax.

Miss Margaret Westrup's new book, 'The Coming of Billy,' will be ready on the 31st instant (Harper & Brothers). It is a series of sketches on the development of the small boy Billy, written from a sympathetic point of view. The book is humorous, and at times pathetic.

An article of special importance in the September number of the Independent Review will be 'The Separation of the Church and State in France,' by M. Emile Combes, the ex-Premier. Another peculiarly interesting paper is 'The Origin and Development of Living Matter,' by Dr. H. Charlton Bastien, Emeritus Professor of Medicine at University College, London. Dr. Bastien here gives the firstfruits of his conclusions on the subject of spontaneous generation, conclusions which will be more fully stated in a work shortly to appear. Among the other contributions to the number are 'Land Reform in Town,' by M. F. W. P. Lawrence; 'The Hall of Peace,' by Miss Sophie Sturge; and 'The English and French Churches in Fiction,' by Mr. Algar Thorold.

'Tongues of Gossip' is the title of a story by Mrs. A. Curtis Sherwood which Mr. Unwin will publish on August 28. The people in this book give various expressions of the religious instinct. A mystic, indifferent to the material world and profoundly conscious of the spiritual; a practical shrewd man, disliking punctatical subtleties and desiring a simple creed; a lover of beauty, to whom religion appeals as a perception of spiritual loveliness; a young man of keen, inquiring temperament, eager to know and to see clearly; a bigot, with a warped mind; and an orthodox believer, upright and honourable—these and others are shown amid their surroundings in a provincial town, suffering, rejoicing, toiling, and influencing their fellow-men for good or for evil.

Mr. Morice Gerard has won for himself a wide circle of readers, and deservedly so. Whether he is dealing with high politics, as in 'The Man of the Moment,' or with modern domestic life, as in 'The Shadow of Gilsland,' he is equally absorbing and lifelike. As is well known, he won the first prize (£100) offered by the Newcastle Weekly Chronicle for a serial, since which he has gone steadily forward. His latest volume is to be issued by Messrs. S. W. Partridge & Co. It is an exceedingly romantic love story, and the scenes are set in Cornwall, with which county the author is very familiar. The title of the volume is to be 'Ruth Gwynnett, Schoolmistress,' and it will be published in the early autumn.

'Lady Jim of Curzon Street' is the title of a new story by Fergus Hume which Mr. Werner Laurie has ready for publication.

On August 20 Mr. Unwin published Miss Florence Warden's new novel, 'The House by the River.' The heroine of this sensational romance is a typewriter girl, to whom various strange things happen. Her husband deserts her on the wedding morning, and disappears; she goes to a lonely house in the country, Riverscourt; here she is shot at; later she is thrust into a wing of the house which is on fire, and is only saved by a private detective living in the house disguised as a footman. Many other startling events occur ere the story reaches a satisfactory conclusion. Every chapter contains a thrilling situation, and the book is full of ingeniously devised surprises. With its skilfully constructed plot and wealth of exciting incidents, the work will probably count among the best things Florence Warden has done.

In October Messrs. Milne & Stephen, Caxton Press, Aberdeen, will publish the sixth of Jessie Annie Anderson's series of sixpenny Christmas Booklets. The forthcoming one is entitled 'Lyrics of Childhood,' and its contents are chiefly selections, by permission, from her poems contributed to the Queen, Sunday Magazine, Sunday Strand, Family Herald, &c.

At the same time Messrs. Milne & Stephen will publish 'Inner Lyrics,' another sixpenny booklet of poems by Alexander J. Grant, a young journalist whose first book of verse, published last Christmas, was very highly praised.

'A New Occupation for Ladies.' A writer in the World's Work and Play states that Mrs. Havelock Ellis sees in the Cornishman's cottage a possible means of making money, and having rented five at from £4 to £6 per year, she lets them furnished at from 12*s*. 6*d*. to three guineas per week, according to the season. Good living is shown to be possible in the Cornish Riviera on five shillings a week.

LIMERICK POST CARDS.

A STRIKING line of humorous post cards has just been issued in twelve copyrighted designs to a set by Messrs. Ely, Boynton & Ely, 45 State Street, Detroit, Mich. These cards are printed in red, black and green, on a yellow background, and are most effective. On one cover an ancient darky waiter is shown at the left, rushing forward with a tray, whereon rests a bottle of bourbon and glasses. At the right a typical Kentucky Colonel, in a towering rage. Between the two is the following Limerick:

There was an old Colonel, named Gamel,
Who called to the waiter, 'Hey Sam'l,
  I've not had a drink
  For ten minutes, I think;
By gad, you must think I'm a camel.'

Others have various comic figures, each accompanied by an appropriate limerick.

While these cards have been published but a short time, the demand for them has grown with great rapidity and they bid fair to be phenomenal sellers. With each order for 500 Limerick Post Cards (price $5), the twelve designs assorted, the publishers include gratis a handsome window show card, containing a full set of cards. Liberal reductions are made for orders for larger quantities.—Geyer's Stationer.

EVERYBODY THINKS HE OR SHE CAN REVIEW BOOKS.

NEARLY every aspirant to journalism proposes to begin by reviewing books. It is hardly too much to say that everybody thinks he or she can review books. This also is a delusion of the first magnitude. Book reviewing is one of the most difficult departments of journalism. It is difficult for various reasons; for one, nobody can review books well who has not first done an immense amount of disinterested reading. The reviewer ought to know who his author is, what he has done, whether his book is up to his mark or not. In fact, he ought to have that miscellaneous knowledge which is so much decried by the ignorant, but which in reality is the rarest possession in the world. Then he ought to be able to set out his conclusions in a bright and readable way. This is almost the last secret of the journalist. Mr. Andrew Lang, in the days when he reviewed novels in the Academy, was supreme in this way. He turned out an article which was bright and pleasant reading, which gave an idea of the books passed under scrutiny, which contained things worth knowing, and thoughts worth pondering. There are not half-a-dozen men in London who can review novels really well. Then the art of taking the book of the day and giving its gist in a clear easy way is almost confined to 'T. P.' Of his many imitators, none has come near him, and yet to the uninitiated it seems as if nothing could be simpler than his weekly task.—'CLAUDIUS CLEAR' in the British Weekly.

COPYRIGHT AGREEMENT BETWEEN NORWAY AND THE UNITED STATES.

[Although not directly affecting this country we are glad to give in the Publishers' Circular another step in the direction of universal International copyright, and also to put on record the exact wording of the American President's message on these copyright questions.—ED. P. C.]

Copyright Office.
WASHINGTON, D. C.

THE Act approved March 3, 1891, amendatory of the copyright law (51st Congress, 2nd session, chap. 565, 26 Statutes at Large, pp. 1106-1110), specifically provides by its 13th section: 'That this Act shall only apply to a citizen or subject of a foreign state or nation when such foreign state or nation permits to citizens of the United States of America the benefit of copyright on substantially the same basis as its own citizens; or when such foreign state or nation is a party to an international agreement which provides for reciprocity in the granting of copyright, by the terms of which agreement the United States of America may at its pleasure become a party to such agreement. The existence of either of the conditions aforesaid shall be determined by the President of the United States by proclamation made from time to time as the purposes of this Act may require.'

Satisfactory official assurances having been given that in Norway the law permits to citizens of the United States the benefit of copyright on substantially the same basis as to the subjects of Norway, the President, by proclamation dated July 1, 1905, the full text of which is given below, has extended to the productions of authors who are subjects of Norway the benefits of the copyright laws of the United States. Therefore entries can be made in this office of the titles or descriptions of literary, dramatic, musical, or artistic works the production of Norwegian subjects, upon receipt of proper applications, titles, and fees. The statutory fee for entry of any article the production of a person not a citizen or resident of the United States is one dollar.

BY THE PRESIDENT OF THE UNITED STATES OF AMERICA.

A Proclamation.

WHEREAS it is provided by section 13 of the Act of Congress of March 3, 1891, entitled 'An Act to amend title sixty, chapter three, of the Revised Statutes of the United States, relating to copyrights,' that said act 'shall only apply to a citizen or subject of a foreign state or nation when such foreign state or nation permits to citizens of the United States of America the benefit of copyright on substantially the same basis as its own citizens; or when such foreign state or nation is a party to an international agreement which provides for reciprocity in the granting of copyright, by the terms of which agreement the United States of America may, at its pleasure, become a party to such agreement:'

And whereas it is also provided by said section that 'the existence of either of the conditions aforesaid shall be determined by the President of the United States by proclamation made from time to time as the purposes of this act may require:'

And whereas satisfactory official assurances have been given that in Norway the law permits to citizens of the United States the benefit of copyright on substantially the same basis as to the citizens of that country:

Now, therefore, I, THEODORE ROOSEVELT, President of the United States of America, do declare and proclaim that the first of the conditions specified in section 13 of the act of March 3, 1891, is now fulfilled in respect to the subjects of Norway.

IN TESTIMONY WHEREOF I have hereunto set my hand and caused the seal of the United States to be affixed.

Done at the City of Washington, this first day of July, in the year of our Lord one [SEAL] thousand nine hundred and five, and of the Independence of the United States of America the one hundred and twenty-ninth.

By the President:
THEODORE ROOSEVELT.

FREDERICK DENISON MAURICE.

BORN AUGUST 29, 1805.

AUBREY DE VÈRE used to say that listening to Maurice was like eating pea-soup with a fork. Professor Jowett, in describing to Sir M. E. Grant Duff a sermon preached by Maurice before the University of Oxford, said, 'All that I could make out was that to-day was yesterday, and this world the same as the next.' In one of her lively letters, Mrs. Carlyle writes: 'Mr. Maurice we rarely see, nor do I greatly regret his absence; for, to tell you the truth, I am never in his company without being attacked with a sort of paroxysm of mental cramp. He keeps one always, with his wire-drawings and paradoxes, as if one were dancing on the points of one's toes (spiritually speaking). And then he will help with the kettle, and never fails to pour it all over the milk-pot and sugar-basin!'

John Stuart Mill maintained that 'great ingenuity and subtlety, and a wide perception of important and unobvious truths, served him, not for putting something better into the worthless heap of received opinions on the great subjects of thought, but for proving to his own mind that the Church of England had known everything from the first, and that all the truths on the ground of which the church and orthodoxy have been attacked (many of which he saw as clearly as anyone) are not only consistent with the Thirty-nine Articles, but are better understood and expressed in these Articles than by anyone who rejects them.'

These and many more adverse criticisms, amid innumerable eulogies of exactly contrary import, have been passed upon a man who exerted a powerful influence for good in his time, and the hundredth anniversary of whose birth now recalls him, not unwelcomely, to mind. It may be interesting, without attempting any originality of treatment or trying to fix anew his place in English literature and thought, to glance briefly back over Maurice's life and recall some of the things he has said and some of the things others have said about him. He was born August 29, 1805, at Normanstone, near Lowestoft, being the fifth child of a rather remarkably philoprogenitive Unitarian minister and teacher of youth. The diversity of religious preference shown by the numerous members of the Maurice family, including the mother, and their epistolary method of communicating their lapses into orthodoxy to the heterodox father under whose roof they all dwelt in common, present a scene of some picturesqueness. Frederick himself seems early to have developed independent views in religion and never to have embraced his father's Unitarianism, lifelong dissenter though he was from the conventional Church-of-Englandism. Educated at Cambridge, he left the university in 1827 without a degree, his quarrel with the Thirty-nine Articles, to which he afterwards became so notably reconciled, depriving him of a diploma. Then followed a short experience of literary life in London, where he wrote his philosophical novel, 'Eustace

Conway,' and where at the age of twenty-three he edited the then recently combined Athenæum and Literary Chronicle—unsuccessfully from a commercial point of view. Perhaps a passage from one of his editorials will partly explain this unsuccess. It certainly reveals qualities that make one regret the writer's early abandonment of the pen for the pulpit as a profession. The editorial is probably unexampled in journalism.

'It is very gratifying,' he writes, 'to think that the influence of reviewers upon society is every day becoming more and more limited. In nine cases out of ten it is a question of no material consequence to the public, or to any individual of it, whether the verdicts which they give are carelessly uttered or are the result of mature and conscientious deliberation. The most perseveringly impartial and earnest critic will find that he has some power of strengthening the foundations of his readers' opinions, but very little of forming those opinions, or changing them, while the most indefatigable of the scribes of darkness can scarcely flatter himself that he has done any single act of successful mischief, and must console himself with the reflection that, in the silent work of lowering the tone of public feeling and morality, his labours have been wholly in vain.'

Surely there was a humourist lost to literature when Frederick Denison Maurice turned his face Oxfordward, took holy orders, and devoted his energies to Christian Socialism and the reformation of a wicked world.—From article by Percy F. Bicknell, in the Dial.

A VILLAGE LIBRARY SAID TO HAVE BEEN USED BY MILTON.

Eighteen miles from London, in the little Buckinghamshire village of Langley, or Langley Marish, there is to be found a small library, which in its position and circumstances possesses an unusual character. Further interest is attached to it from an apparently well-founded tradition that a great poet used the library, and left there what is still shown to visitors as 'Milton's chair.' Leaving the dust-clouds and dangers of that 'Via Appia' of the motor-car, the Bath Road, at the signpost, the road runs north about a mile to Langley Place, and thence a few hundred yards west to the church, which stands in a square formed by picturesque red-brick almshouses, the church cottage, and the road. The church consists of two broad aisles, the south aisle containing a sort of open chapel, at the back of which is a very curious family pew, jealously screened off from the rest of the church by latticed casements. More like a long, narrow stage-box than a pew, it is profusely decorated in late Renaissance style, with the armorial bearings of the Kedermister family and of their various connections. Some of the Prayer Books contain the form of service to be used in 'Touching for the King's Evil.' But the chief interest of this bizarre family pew is that it leads into a small and probably unique library. The careful donor, Sir John Kedermister (of a Worcestershire family), appears to have been Ranger of the royal park of Langley, within the 'honour of Windsor,' and to have performed his duties so excellently that James I., with true Stuart lavishness, knighted him and bestowed upon him the mansion and estate of Langley. The knight, anxious to complete the foundation of his family by the addition of a private chapel to the parish church, set about propitiating the Dean and Chapter of Windsor by founding sundry benevolent institutions, such as a hospital, almshouses, and this little theological library. An old deed, or 'indenture tripartite,' bearing date February 13, 1649, recites:

> that the said Sir John Kedermister prepared a convenient place for a library, adjoining to the west end of the said chapel, and intended to furnish the same with books of divinity, as well for the perpetual benefit of the vicar and curate of the parish of Langley as for all other ministers and preachers of God's Word that would resort thither to make use of the books therein.

These books are said to have numbered between 500 and 600, but the curiously painted presses do not now contain more than 300 volumes. Old editions of the patristic writings naturally predominate, but the following titles, taken at random from a manuscript catalogue on vellum dated 1638, may be of interest: 'Purchas his Pilgrimes,' 'Flores doctorum,' 'Gregorij Thaumaturgi opera,' 'Gregorij Valencia opera,' 'Mendoza in Regum,' 'Biblie Junij,' 'Busaci arca medica,' 'Bridges against the Pope's supremacie,' 'Saxoniæ historia'; and for those who could not go to Nathaniel Butler, his shop, 'At the signe of the pide Bull neere Saint Austen's Gate,' there was a copy of > 'The True Church, shewed to all men that desire to be members of the same. In six bookes, containing the whole bodie of Diuinitie. The contents whereof are set downe after the Epistles by Gr. Williams, Dr. of Diuinitie.

Elaborate precautions seem to have been taken for the safe custody of the little library. From the old deed already quoted we learn > that the said four poor persons [i.e. the occupants of the almshouses] should have a key of the said library, which they should for ever keep locked up in the iron chest under all their four keys, unless when any minister or preacher of God's Word or other known person should desire to use the said library, or to study, or to make use of any books in the same, and then the said four poor people or one of them at the least should from time to time, unless the heirs of Sir John Kedermister being then and there present should otherwise direct, attend within the door of the said library and not depart from thence during all the time that any person should remain therein, and should all that while keep the key of the said door fastened with a chain unto one of their girdles, and should also take special care that no books be lent or purloined out of the said library, but that every book be duly placed in their room, and that the room should be kept clean; and that if at any time any money or reward be given to the said poor people for their attendance in the library as aforesaid, the same should be to the only use of such of those poor people as should at that time then and there attend.'

If they lost their key to the 'iron chest' they were to pay for a new one out of their weekly allowances, &c. Was ever treasure more jealously guarded?

We have mentioned the village tradition to the effect that Milton used the library This may well have been so; for the village of Horton, where John Milton the elder lived for many years, is only two and a-half miles away, and we know that the poet spent six studious years there, from 1632 to 1638; and although the 'indenture tripartite' is dated 1649, the catalogue dates from 1638, while a tablet gives 1623 as the actual date of the gift. Alas! the old house at Horton was pulled down many years ago. But no material changes can rob the neighbourhood of its immortal charm as the environment in which some of the most beautiful poems in our language were composed. 'L'Allegro' and 'Il Penseroso,' 'Arcades,' 'Comus' and 'Lycidas,' were all written at Horton in the intervals of a truly monumental classical reading; and it is impossible to conceive that such a lover of books and diligent collector of them could have left unexplored and unused what was, for its time, an important library, separated from his father's house by but two or three miles of level meads and shady road. HANDLING CUSTOMERS WITH COMPLAINTS.

Probably the greatest test of business capability and character is the treatment of customers who come to the store with complaints. Intolerance of complaint and display of temper on slight provocation always reveal a lack of the equanimity of temperament necessary to success in retail business.

In justice to the public it may be said that few of them make complaints except for cause, and the manner of their treatment on these rare occasions determines whether you are to retain their good-will and trade or forfeit both.

It pays, therefore, to suppress all feeling of resentment, whether the complaint be justifiable or not. A little reason and consideration will rectify the trouble in most cases without loss of trade or prestige, and not infrequently the politic rectification of a difficulty of this character will make the customer a friend for all time.

He is the most successful dealer who makes even his own mistakes serve a business purpose. See to it that your clerks thoroughly understand your policy in this matter, for the tactlessness of clerks is often responsible for the loss of customers.

The dealer might well take a lesson from the department store in this matter of handling complaints. The big stores recognise that almost every complaint has an educational value. Customers with a grievance sometimes reveal incapacity or carelessness where least expected, and the revelation may profit the merchant many dollars.

They are not an effective check on loose business methods or slipshod workmanship, and it is both just and politic not only to rectify the difficulty, but also to thank the complaining customer for calling the matter to your attention. Those who take a pleasure in making complaints are too few to merit consideration.—American Stationer.

'THE BASIS OF ENGLISH RHYTHM.'*

It is hard to maintain a properly judicial spirit in reviewing this pamphlet of scarcely sixty-three pages. By it any adept is likely to be rapt into a trance of amazed enthusiasm, searching in vain among his memories of the hundreds of jottings, notes, remarks, essays, articles, booklets, books, and tomes which have appeared since George Gascoigne penned his all too brief and all too hurried 'Notes of Instruction' in 1575, for even one with anything like so much pith, sap, and kernel in so little space. In several respects it is the most important utterance yet made on the subject. Who disbelieves should read it and be convinced. He may disagree with some statements and inferences, but he will find himself understanding every sentence at first reading, and reading many sentences over and over for mere relish of their novelty or cogency, or sound, plain common sense. Everywhere he will be stimulated to thought, and much of it will be new thought, much instant clarification of old puzzles.—From a review in the New York Nation.

IS THERE NO STANDARD FOR SHORT STORIES?

The differences of critical opinion in regard to 'Fagan,' the winner of the $5,000 prize in the short-story competition instituted by Collier's Weekly, leads the Argonaut (San Francisco) to the conclusion that 'there is no standard of excellence for short stories, and there never will be.' While three of the judges in the competition gave 'Fagan' preference over all others, Senator Lodge gave it zero out of a possible one hundred. Says the Argonaut:

'With crude materials, imitating Kipling and London, he [the author of "Fagan"] has made a crudely big, but by no means a great, story. The only point where "Fagan" exhibits a trace of genius is in the description of the Filipino girl. And this seems to be the opinion of most readers of intelligence. . . . Confirmatory evidence of this is that "Fagan" was rejected by two magazines before it was sent to the weekly's competition, where it was to win the grand prize. . . .'

AS IT STRIKES THE SERMON REPORTER.

Some sermons are unreportable, some are difficult to report; others disgust the stenographer by their exaggeration. Such is the verdict of an anonymous 'Sermon Reporter' in the Homiletic Review (New York), who says:

'There are some sermons which are unreportable, or which, if they must be reported, have to be remodelled. Sermons of this kind are delivered by some of the most famous preachers of the day, and it is an unsolved mystery to the reporter how it happens that the men who deliver such incoherent sermons manage to build up their reputations. Nevertheless there is often a personal charm about a preacher which compensates for his lack of rhetoric.'

He cites a certain preacher of this class, Dr. G. F. Pentecost, of Yonkers, N.Y., who 'stands up straight in his pulpit, in a manner that suggests a campaign orator.' He actually hypnotises the congregation, and on the reporter makes the impression, to quote the writer's words:

'That he is a man of wide experience, a sort of ecclesiastical commercial traveller, who handles a side line in theology. One gathers a general impression of what he has to say, but it seems as though it were only by chance that he says it definitely. Many of his sentences cannot be printed without alteration. Subjects and predicates, singulars and plurals, pasts, presents, and futures will all be mixed up in the same period. The only consolation is that he does sooner or later come to a full stop.'

Other sermons are pleasant to listen to, but have to be remodelled—practically rewritten—before they can be printed. The words flow on and soothe by their liquid tones.

Even a very eloquent and affecting preacher may be unreportable, and his words when written seem like 'sound and fury, signifying nothing.' Such a one is Canon Knox Little, of Worcester, of whom the writer says:

'He allows his feelings to carry him where they will, and he carries the congregation with him. He will preach for about forty minutes, and deliver one continuous stream of perfervid sentences. The effect of the words, however, depends so entirely upon the time and place, and upon the passion and delivery of the preacher, that when they are written out they seem cold and meaningless.'

The reporter thinks with Rev. C. H. Grundy, of Deptford, London, that 'the best kind of preachers are those who have grown daughters; for daughters are relentless critics of parental mannerisms, and they have no illusions as to the value of ecclesiastical reputations.'

ESPERANTO.

As people are beginning to ask languidly if Esperanto is to supersede Grape Nuts for breakfast, it may be useful to give an account of it by its British president, who writes to the editor of the Outlook as follows:

'Sir,—I have just read Mr. G. S. Street's able onslaught on "Esperanto" in the Outlook.

'I rejoice that we have at last found what we have long been looking for—an open and fearless foe—and I feel now that we have more reason to "hope" than ever. Everything that can be urged against us has been urged with a trenchant vehemence that nothing but truth and fact could withstand; and after the attack "Esperanto" remains not only unshaken but positively untouched! We are told that we are "thoughtlessly intelligent," and that though two hundred and fifty thousand persons speak "Esperanto"—and "although there is no reason why that quarter of a million should not be multiplied many times"—the teaching and learning of Esperanto should be visited with thoroughly deterrent penalties and its literature burned by the common hangman! And why? Because, forsooth—according to Mr. Street—the idea of an artificial language is an abomination! He might as well argue that men and women ought not to wear clothes and that every triumph of man over Nature is an abomination!

'His point is that language is a growth that grows with our growth, and not a thing that can be trained or cultivated or evolved! He prefers the chatter of the monkey to the song of the syren, and a wilderness to a garden, and he is no believer in the addition of man or woman to Nature in any shape or form!

'He further declares that to learn an artificial language is to learn bare symbols only. It is, he maintains, to bark for pleasure or snarl for anger or hang out the tongue for thirst. I venture to think he cannot have learnt a single sentence in Esperanto or he would not say this.

selected at the Conference will direct and guide its growth and prevent grotesque divergences, for it is a living thing and has come to stay, however its professors be "admonished."

'It will make the learning of foreign languages more easy, and will give the foreigner more time to study and master the mighty English tongue; for, meantime, it will do for Europe what Hindustani, a language made in much the same way, has done and is doing for India.—I am, Sir,

SKETCHES FROM THE DIARY OF A COMMERCIAL TRAVELLER OF THE MIDDLE OF LAST CENTURY.*

A sight probably as novel as spectators ever witnessed, and a sensation as strange and peculiar as creatures ever participated in, have been respectively enjoyed by him who started, and a man of the world who witnessed the start, for the first time, of an inexperienced youth just budding into manhood in the capacity of a commercial traveller; into whose hands his employer had entrusted, in addition to the important duties of his mission, a horse and a gig with all their concomitant trappings and equipments! What an exalted character, in his own estimation! What a new field of service and action, observation and scene, presents itself to his view at every step; astonishing his weak nerves, and gradually increasing his knowledge, sharpening his reflective faculties, and enhancing his opinion of self! Yet, what a novice is he in the ways of men, and in artifices of the world! How little competent is he to take care of himself, much less the interest and property of his anxious and confiding principal!

So it is, however: all things and all men must have a beginning. How infatuating is the road to the aspiring, and how alluring are the apparent ease, stylish turn-out, and gentlemanly garb of the periodical visitant to the counting-house or business premises of his master during his minority! What an anxious looking for of the termination of his apprenticeship, when he shall loosen the trammels of his bondage, and himself wander (by the assistance of friends and a probably precocious yet undeveloped ability) the free proprietor of a horse and chaise, with a roving commission to see the world and partake of its many prepromised good things, with, apparently, the sons of ease and leisure, but, in reality, as he will too soon learn by painful experience, hard worked and hard working commercial body. Alas! how mistaken is the notion of tranquillity and quiet in a commercial career! Yes, a single journey—one business tour—is the best argument against the opinion of those who imagine travellers' occupation and commercial life a sinecure.

Even the parlour or counting-house lecture, with its quiet inculcation of business principles, which a young man—not knowing where it will end—listens to patiently, and assents to fully, after undertaking the performance of a journey, is not without its pleasurable excitement. What faithful promises of a rigid performance of all the required duties are made—what pledges of compliance with all the exacted demands are given! How conformable to every wish, expressive of every hope, and full of expectation of success, is the ambitious aspirant of a commercial occupation. What anticipations of delight to himself—of profit and emolument to his employer—present themselves! How anxious is the incipient traveller to show his devotedness to the interest of his principal! Yet how little qualified is he to supply the place and walk in the steps of a man with so much experience and so many claims upon their connection as his retired, successful, respected predecessor, whose spirit and manner he has resolved to emulate, whose energy and industry he has mentally pledged himself to rival. How fatally delusive, too often, also, are such resolves! Yet, far be it from me to offer a discouraging word. Advancement is easy, where industry, ability, and propriety are sure; but young men are frequently too sanguine, too certain of success, without either the use of a well-judged and proper application, the exercise of a correct and manly address, or a fortitude in sustaining the denials and reverses peculiar to a commercial situation.

To return, however, to the preparations for the start. What an air of superiority the new-fledged ambassador at once assumes over his previous colleagues! With what a dignified satisfaction, too, the portmanteau, desk, and driving box are locked, and deposited by himself (performing for the first, and probably for the last time in his life, the duty of a 'boots') in their well arranged and proper receptacle! and how joyously the first bunch of keys—an emblem of authority and power—are looked upon by their juvenile possessor! What a nice arrangement of his rug, and various garments! How exultingly, after a hearty salutation, the gloves are donned, and he attains the acme of his ambition, the elevated driving seat, a master of the reins, and the governor of at least a neighing quadruped and a four-wheeled drag! How studious is he to produce the most striking effect, and leave a strong impression of his ability to drive! Yes, thus with arms well squared a-kimbo, and body perpendicular, the whip whisked around the horse's ears, our young empiric is borne gaily upon the wings of commerce; building, as he advances, castles in the air, with a fancied life of undisturbed tranquillity, and a fairy land before him.

WORKING EXPENSES.

Sir,—Extract from 'Mortimer's 'Ready Reckoner for Stationers, Booksellers, &c.': 'Book Trade'—'Working expenses vary from 15 per cent. to 20 per cent. on turnover. Say for purpose of comparison the average is 17½ per cent. There is an actual loss on every transaction that does not produce this amount. Example: Books bought at sale 7*s.* 6½*d.* with 5 per cent. discount, and sold at 3*d.* off, show a margin of 16·28 per cent., but as the working expenses amount to 17·50 per cent. there is a loss of 1·22 per cent. on every transaction.' 'Net books show a better margin than subject books, but in their case there is a loss of ·83 per cent. unless the bookseller can take advantage of the odd copies and discounts.' How many books can he buy sufficient of to get odd copies, and, what is just as important, he must sell every one or he still loses. Can he do it and how often?

My firm had a copy of Gilbey's 'Animal Painters,' 2 vols., two guineas, come in to-day for an order. It is invoiced at two guineas 'subject to 10 per cent. only.' This calculated as above shows a net loss of 7½ per cent. It is not business at all. If the bookseller could put the whole 4*s.* in his pocket after deducting working expenses, would it be too much on a two-guinea transaction?

It appears to me that booksellers as long as they find they are getting a penny more for a book than the invoice price think they are making that penny profit, and overlook the fact that rent, taxes, wages, and unsaleable stock all have to be paid for.

How publishers can send out travellers and expect booksellers to buy and put into stock goods they know full well can never be sold to make a profit, I can't imagine. But you can't blame them so long as booksellers are fools enough to do it.

Do not firms subscribe to the Booksellers' Association that they may be protected and insured a living profit? If so, like their other transactions it is a loss, and in this case to the extent of 100 per cent. Yours truly,

Bristol. A Bookseller's Assistant.'

A GERMAN 'WHO'S WHO.'

Sir,—By the same post we are sending you a copy of 'Wer Ist's,' edited by Herrmann A. L. Degener, and published by this firm. Please accept it for your office desk; we think you will find it very often quite as useful as the English 'Who's Who.'

---

* In 1847 Joseph Masters, of Aldersgate Street London, published for the author, Throne Crick, of Leicester, a little work entitled 'Sketches from the Diary of a Commercial Traveller,' from which we give some extracts.—Ed. P C.

The industrious and ambitious compiler and editor of this very useful and wonderfully complete work has been living for a number of years in England, where he apparently learned to appreciate the value of the English 'Who's Who.'

A book like this has been wanted in Germany for many years; so far all efforts to produce one were failures.

From the Introduction we see that Mr. Herrmann Degener has had the ambition to create for Germany what the English nation possesses already for a long run of years, and one must confess without reserve that he has been really very successful.

Compared with the first volumes of 'Who's Who,' Mr. Herrmann Degener's 'Wer Ist's' is a giant; it really approaches in size the world wide famous 'Who's Who' of our day, containing no less than about 13,500 biographies of famous living Germans, including a number of Austrians, Swiss, French, and many well-known Englishmen, especially among the politicians. In its hospitality afforded to non-Germans the 'Wer Ist's' no doubt even surpasses 'Who's Who'; and besides the biographies it contains valuable and cleverly compiled data of general interest from the national and international statistics; 2,600 Pseudonyms of the best known living German-Austrian authors, with their real names; the princes and heads of all the Powers and States of the world; a long list of the German, Austrian, and Swiss places of learning, such as universities, technical high schools, libraries, academies, museums, &c.

Of course one could point out a number of names of well-known people which are not contained yet in this handy volume; besides there is a small number of mistakes, but notwithstanding, one cannot help admiring the careful editing and good judgment of Mr. Degener. In his Introduction he asks all those who use the work to inform him or the publishers of any mistakes they may find; he will be thankful for proposals as to those who should be included in future annual editions of the German 'Who's Who,' as indeed this book is intended to become quite complete. The print is clear, the paper good, the binding strong and tasteful, rather out of the common in design, and the price of 9*s.* 6*d.*, although higher than for 'Who's Who,' is not high for what it offers.

Yours most faithfully,

H. A. Ludwig Degener.

Notices of Books

From Messrs. J. Baker & Son, Clifton.—'Thoughts: Transcendental and Practical, by M. Carta Sturge. We have found these thoughts particularly attractive, and we believe that anyone who takes up the book is likely to discover something which will either appeal to his sense of beauty or be helpful to him. There is no waste of words. The argument is pithy and to the point, and there is distinct originality. Such a work comes like a good wholesome breeze, and tends to clear out some of the dusty corners of the mind.

From Messrs. Blackie & Son, Ltd.—'A Text-Book of Algebra, embodying Graphic and other Solutions and Applications to Arithmetic and Geometry,' by A. E. Layng, M.A. Part I. We have gone very thoroughly into this book, working out many of the exercises ourselves, with the result that we have been greatly impressed by the method of instruction laid down by the author. He has directed his efforts towards gradually building up the knowledge of the pupil, carefully testing the stability of each stage before proceeding to the next, and the force of this teaching, combined with a complete mastery of the subject, is calculated with the majority of scholars to have a most favourable effect.

From the same.—'An Introduction to Algebra,' by R. C. Bridgett, M.A. In approaching the subject of this volume through arithmetic, the aim of the author is 'to demonstrate to the pupil the facts that algebra is merely an extension or generalisation of arithmetic, and that it can be turned to immediate use in expressing briefly formulæ otherwise hard to remember and in solving arithmetical questions rapidly.' It is a useful little book, the outcome apparently of an extended experience in teaching, and it is likely to be of good service in the instruction of lower forms.

From the same.—'Paradise Lost, Book V.,' edited, with Introduction, Notes, and Appendices, by Albert E. Roberts, M.A. ('Blackie's Junior School Milton'); L'Anniversaire de Blanche: Scènes Enfantines,' by Clémence Sannois, with a Preface by George Petilleau, B.A., and illustrations by R. Hope; 'Horacis Odes,' in four books, edited by W. H. D. Rouse, Litt.D. ('Blackie's Latin Texts'). All these are carefully prepared little manuals, and may confidently be recommended to the attention of those engaged in tuition. 'Blackie's Latin Texts' is a new series designed especially for schools. Each volume contains a short Introduction dealing with the author's life and works, his style, and the subject of the book. Included in the Introduction is a brief note on the MSS. and the principles of textual criticism, which are illustrated by a few selected critical notes at the foot of the text, no other notes being given.

From Messrs. A. Brown & Sons, Ltd., 5 Farringdon Avenue, E.C.—'Forty Years' Researches in British and Saxon Burial Mounds of East Yorkshire, including Romano-British Discoveries, and a Description of the Ancient Entrenchments on a section of the Yorkshire Wolds,' by J. R. Mortimer, with over 1,000 illustrations from drawings by Agnes Mortimer. This is a work that scarcely falls within the scope of a general notice, or that can be adequately described in a few lines. It represents the results of some forty years' laborious, painstaking research, conducted with an insistence and fidelity that only the antiquarian and scientist can thoroughly appreciate. Mr. Mortimer's volume contains the records, carefully taken down at the time so as to avoid any possibility of error, of the opening of nearly three hundred British burial mounds of the Stone and Bronze periods, and over sixty mounds of the Iron Age; a few Romano-British interments; and several Anglo-Saxon graveyards, together with an examination of a considerable part of an extensive system of earthworks, evidently of great antiquity, which are spread out like a vast network over this same region. An important feature that deserves to be mentioned is that these researches are confined within an area of about seventy-five miles. The richness of the locality in regard to antiquarian investigation may well excite wonder, and, as the author cogently remarks, probably never again in this country will it be found possible to form such a collection of locally obtained specimens. The volume, as we have said, with its minute detail, its description of the various barrows excavated, the Towthorpe Group, the Aldo Group, the Garrow-by-Wold Group, and so forth, is one that only the scientist can thoroughly appreciate. To such an one we are sure its four hundred and fifty pages will be productive both of great interest and practical service.

From Mr. C. W. Daniel.—'Brought into Subjection,' by Lottie Long. Crude and violent, these stories are evidently the work of a beginner, and we think Miss Long was ill-advised in publishing the first efforts of her pen. Like most young writers, she deals with subjects that require the greatest art and skill; Mr. Thomas Hardy himself would shrink from treating so bold a theme as that which is the subject of the first story. Miss Lang, however, is sincere, and she can feel keenly; for this reason alone she deserves our respect, if she cannot earn our commendation.

From the same.—'Bulbul in Search of a Religion.' A Parsee of learning and ability visits England in search of a religion; it is hardly necessary to say that he does not find one, and that he leaves our shores a wiser but a sadder man. During the course of his search he interviews all kinds of prominent men, and by his naïveté and charm of manner wins affection and esteem even when he is most destructive to the cherished feelings of those from whom he is seeking information. The jeu d'esprit is clever and amusing; it makes no discoveries, but the anonymous author has a light touch and an agreeable manner. The one mistake of the book is Herr von Beest; to imagine that he voices the opinions of Darwin and his disciples is to expose one's ignorance of the great scientist's work.

From the same.—'Great Thinkers.' Compiled by M. G. Haynes. This compilation of brief thoughts from well known writers is better than most of its kind; the contents are arranged in some practical order, and the selections have in the main been chosen with due regard to the general fitness of things. We are not at one with the compiler in regarding Miss Lilian Whiting, Dean Farrar, and Sydney Smith as 'great thinkers.'

From Mr. Henry S. Drane.—'As the Sparks Fly Upward,' by Lady Napier of Magdala. Lord and Lady Tremenheere, to whom we are introduced at the beginning of this story of high society, are the owners of a 'stately home of many generations.' Trouble, however, now surrounds them from the fact that his lordship is in declining health and a son and heir is needed to continue the succession. Of this fact Lord John Porlock, his only male relative, is also cognisant, and having allied himself by marriage to the daughter of a beautiful Italian woman with ambitious views, the fact is still further impressed upon him. Fate, however, intervenes, for by the birth of twin sons to Lord Tremenheere, subsequent to his early decease, the cherished schemes of Genesta, otherwise Lady John Porlock, are thus frustrated. We are likewise introduced to some old friends of the family in the persons of Lord and Lady Normancourt, whose 'dearest wish' is to bring about a marriage between her ladyship's 'sole surviving son,' Harry Balham, with Lady Lorraine Tremenheere, the fascinating heroine of the novel; but the course of true love, in their case, does not run smooth. The varied situations involved by these conflicting elements have enabled the author to produce an entertaining story, and also to verify the text chosen by her for its title: 'Yet man is born unto trouble as the sparks fly upward.'

From Messrs. Dean & Son, Ltd.—'Handy Dictionary of Prose Quotations,' compiled by George W. Powers. There are upwards of two thousand short extracts in this little volume, treating of subjects which may fairly be presumed to interest the thinking public. Addison, Cervantes, Carlyle, Macaulay, Shakespeare, Swift, Emerson, Dr. Johnson, Dickens, Disraeli, Lord Chesterfield, Marcus Aurelius, Euripides, Herbert Spencer, Burke, Pliny, Daniel Webster—only to mention a few of the three hundred and sixty-eight authorities quoted—delightfully jostle one another in their claims to be heard. In such society it is impossible not to be intellectually benefited, and the book, moreover, possesses invaluable claims as a work of reference.

From Messrs. R. A. Everett & Co., Ltd.—'Dentition of the Horse, Ox, and Sheep,' by Frank Townend Barton, M.R.C.V.S. The importance of understanding the dentition of a horse, if for no other reason than as a means of judging his age and so guarding against unscrupulous trading, need scarcely be insisted upon, while the information given in regard to the teeth of the ox and sheep is likely to prove serviceable to stockholders. Mr. Barton's work is clear, practical, and suitably illustrated.

From the same.—'Sporting Dogs: their Points and Management in Health and Disease,' by Frank Townend Barton, M.R.C.V.S. In this volume the author discusses the relative merits of the pointer, the English setter, the retriever, the spaniel, the foxhound, the terrier, and the numerous other varieties of sporting dog in a knowledgeable way that should enlist the hearty appreciation of all lovers and breeders of our canine associates. In addition there are chapters on the ailments that affect dogs—diseases of the stomach, bowels, urinary organs, ears, eye, and so forth—with their treatment; and many valuable suggestions are offered in regard to their training, preparation for show purposes, feeding, &c. The illustrations, numbering over seventy, form a decided and valuable attraction of the work.

From Messrs. Eyre & Spottiswoode, Ltd., 33 Paternoster Row, E.C.—'The Poetical Works of Alfred Tennyson.' There would seem to be a demand at the present time for miniature editions of the great authors works, but nothing has yet reached us so compact in form, so clearly printed, and generally so daintily produced as this edition of the late Poet Laureate's works. Probably if the present craze goes on, with the inevitable competition that it excites, we shall eventually reach the size in our classical library of a threepenny-bit, but that time has yet to come. The volume now under notice contains 1,035 pages, is $2\frac{1}{4}$ by $2\frac{11}{16}$ inches in size, and may be had, we understand, in different varieties of binding, ranging from red levant morocco to half-vellum. There are also higher-priced special designs.

From the Glasgow Corporation Public Libraries.—'Index Catalogue of the Woodside District Library.' Mr. F. T. Barrett, the Glasgow City Librarian, is to be congratulated on the compilation of this excellent catalogue; the work has been carefully and intelligently done, and the price at which it is issued is remarkably cheap.

From Messrs. P. S. King & Son.—'Select Documents Illustrating Mediæval and Modern History,' by Emil Reich. It can be said of few books that they have grown out of a practical need, but it can be truly said of this one. It is strongly advisable that all students of history should be made acquainted with some of the original documents 'in which the causes, motives, or results of great historical movements have been partially crystallised.' Dr. Reich insists that the teacher ought to acquire that sense of historic 'atmosphere' without which his teaching will remain dry and inefficient; for this reason, the documents have been left in their original languages—Latin, Greek, English, French, German, and Dutch, though English translations of the German and Dutch documents are added. The present work comprises the Middle Ages, and (with regard to some documents relating to Christianity) the fourth century A.D., and modern times up to 1871. Each remark is prefaced by a short explanatory note, and reference books are in each case given for auxiliary reading. The selection of documents, we need hardly say, has been made with skill and discrimination; few living historians could have done the work so ably and so wisely as Dr. Reich. An index of seventy pages of small type gives additional value to a work of great and far-reaching importance.

From Mr. John Lane.—'The Ford,' by Arthur E. J. Legge. This is a novel that we should term essentially of the womanish artificial type, without backbone or any true nobility. Contrast is a very good effect to strive at in fiction, but it may be produced at the expense of reality. In Mr. Legge's story there is one good woman, and all the rest, as a schoolboy would roughly express it, are 'rotters.' The one good woman is beloved by a man almost double her age, who has, according to the usual expression, 'lived his life' and had many affaires with women. Now he has met his fate. But unfortunately for him the son of one of his previous loves, an attractive boy some twenty years his junior, interposes and eventually carries off the prize. The older man, having unselfishly done everything he can to promote the happiness of the young couple, comes by his death in an appropriately romantic fashion, and the story ends. That it has its good points we do not for a moment deny, but we regret that Mr. Legge has not devoted his manifest ability to a higher, more thoughtfully conceived purpose.

From Mr. T. Werner Laurie.—'Literary Landmarks of Torquay: being a Record of its Literary Associations,' written and illustrated by W. J. Roberts. It is very pleasant to read of the various literary celebrities—Charles Kingsley, J. A. Froude, Elizabeth Barrett, Eden Phillpotts, W. E. Norris, Christabel Coleridge, P. H. Gosse, the naturalist, and others—who have at different times made Torquay their home, and the record is accompanied by several interesting illustrations produced from photographs. This is a slight, unpretentious little volume, but by no means without attraction.

From Mr. John Long.—'Glimpses of the Ages,' by Theophilus E. Samuel Scholes M.D. This work was originally intended by the author to be in one volume of some 300 pages; the book before us contains 400 pages, and in a year's time there is to follow a second volume, presumably of the same proportions. This unexpected increase of labour is largely owing to the author's redundant and involved style. Though a man of considerable learning and wide reading, he is not complete master of his pen; indeed, he is at times extremely careless in his use of words. The object of his work is 'to review the arguments adduced in support of the alleged superiority of the white race, and the alleged inferiority of the coloured races.' He attempts, with some measure of success, to expose the falsity of the assumption that the white race is superior to the coloured races; he runs counter to many of the conclusions of such men as Darwin, Herbert Spencer, Blumenbach, Buckle, Vogt, &c.; but we are far from thinking him either 'presumptuous' or 'impertinent' for so doing. The first volume treats of the mental and physical aspects of the subject; the concluding portion of the work will deal with the moral aspect. The book is very readable, and has opened out for us new avenues of thought.

From Messrs. Marshall Brothers.—'He Cometh!' by Rev. H. W. Webb-Peploe, M.A. Thoughtful but uninspiring, these sermons have little significance either for the scholar or for the plain man in the street. The usual excuse is made for their publication—'this is only done in deference to the oft-expressed wishes of some by whom the addresses were heard and appreciated.' Members of the author's congregation may be glad to possess a copy of their pastor's sermons, but the general reader will find little to interest him in these conscientious, dull pages.

From Mr. John Murray.—'The Vegetable Garden: Illustrations, Descriptions, and Culture of the Garden Vegetables of Cold and Temperate Climates,' by M. M. Vilmorin-Andrieux (English edition published under the direction of W. Robinson). It is claimed for this work that it is the first book in any language on the cultivation of vegetables which classifies, describes, and illustrates these 'most important of all plants to the human race.' Be this as it may, it is undoubtedly a very exhaustive volume, treating of its subject in a way that constantly evokes the admiration of the reader. So far as we are able to judge without placing the book to practical use, no corner of the vegetable kingdom is left unexplored, and the information is invariably accurate and clearly imparted. The numerous illustrations also are a valuable accessory of the work, and in the matter of paper, print, and binding it could scarcely be better equipped. Altogether, it is a volume that to vegetable growers should prove of the greatest interest and assistance.

From George Newnes, Ltd.—'Drawings by Sir E. J. Poynter, Bart., P.R.A.' This new volume of the 'Modern Master Draughtsmen' series fully maintains the high standard of the series. The book consists of 48 illustrations reproducing various studies and introduced by some ten pages of text giving a concise biography and some remarks upon the influences which seem most apparent in the artist's work.

From the Religious Tract Society.—'Home Life in Bird-Land,' by Oliver G. Pike, with over 80 original photographs by the author, and four coloured plates. We have before remarked upon the wonderful portraits of birds and flowers that our natural history writers are providing for us; here is another volume, as good as any we have seen, charming in both illustration and text. The author has a love for his subject which makes this book appeal at once to the reader, however little he may previously have read on the subject.

From the Walter Scott Publishing Co.—'The Story of the Harp,' by W. H. Grattan Flood. This work forms the sixth volume of 'The Music Story Series,' edited by Frederick J. Crowest, and issued by this firm. The purpose of the author, unfolded in the Preface, has been 'to present in a popular form the various evolutions of the harp until its final development by Erard at the commencement of the nineteenth century.' In the course of his interesting story we are likewise made conversant with the high place held by this venerable instrument in the music of the ancient world as well as the mediæval nations. Among leading harpists the Irish are acknowledged to have been supreme, but in England there have not been wanting enthusiastic patrons and players even among our monarchs, Henry V., the hero of Agincourt, being himself a harpist and composer. Poetical tributes to the instrument also abound in the writings of John Milton, Sir Walter Scott, and Thomas Moore. The volume closes with the orchestral use of the harp and its introduction into the scores of master musicians such as Spohr, Meyerbeer, Berlioz, Liszt, Wagner, and Gounod. Many photogravure illustrations appear in the book, adding to its completeness.

From Messrs. Smith, Elder & Co.—'Two Moods of a Man,' by Horace G. Hutchinson. This is a novel worth reading; the reader's interest is kept both by the incidents, which are generally unexpected, and by the questions continually brought up in his mind—how far may a man do what he likes, and how much will he be punished for doing it? George Hood, the subject of the story, believes in no future existence and yet recognises clearly that faith to those who have it is a priceless possession. He longs for all that is good, yet cannot tell what good is; with the best intentions he deliberately behaves like a blackguard, and yet to some extent he keeps our sympathy. In love physically with a beautiful gipsy whom he has married by gipsy rites, he deserts her and her child to marry legally an American heiress who rouses his intellectual love; both are made unhappy, and Hood yields to the opium habit, which eventually kills him. Both the women are well drawn, and we can admire both. The book, though tragic in its conclusion, is not gloomy, and the writing is considerably above the average.

From F. Warne & Co.—'Wayside and Woodland Blossoms—a Pocket Guide to British Wild Flowers,' by Edward Step, F.L.S. The volume before us is a new edition of the second series, the first series having been re-issued by the same firm early in the present year. There are no less than 127 full-page coloured plates, from drawings by Miss Mabel E. Step; and the more one examines the book the more evident is its value and interest. We can confidently recommend it to anyone who takes an interest in our wayside blossoms.

From Mr. Philip Wellby.—'His Private Life,' by H. Smith. We are early given to understand in this novel that Alfred Newell, its predominant character, was of too large and masculine a nature to understand women, and that his worst mistakes arose from this cause. Grievous mistakes they undoubtedly were. Arrived at the age of forty-seven, after a career that tended towards studiousness rather than liveliness of character, he married an attractive young girl of eighteen, of a particularly fresh and unsophisticated disposition. Instead of allowing her to exercise a natural outlet for her juvenile spirits, he, manlike, hedged her in with restrictions which, though evidence of his great affection, she failed to appreciate. The result was that during the absence of her husband on Government business abroad she fell into the clutches of a handsome young army officer, who, favoured by circumstances, accomplished her ruin. But she is still high-minded and truthful, and on the return of her husband she informs him that the child which is about to be born is not his. Newell, after a scene of painful intensity, for love of his young wife accepts the situation, and she, who has been led to realise the heartlessness of her false lover and the nobility of her husband, comes to love him intensely in return. Eventually the breach between them is healed, and the story ends happily. It is remarkable for much plain speaking and a rather artificial conception of life, but there is considerable strength in the portrayal of several of the characters, notably Newell and his wife.

NEW EDITIONS, &c. — Messrs. Chatto & Windus have issued in the 'St. Martin's Library' a very neat one-volume edition on thin paper of 'The Reign of Queen Anne,' by Justin McCarthy. This brings within reach of the ordinary reader in handy pocket form a work that is distinctly worthy of attention.—A new and revised edition has been issued by Messrs. James Clarke & Co. of 'How to Read the Bible: Hints for Sunday School Teachers and other Bible Students,' by Walter F. Adeney, M.A., D.D., a work of great religious usefulness.—From Messrs. Alden & Co., of Oxford, we have received a copy of 'The Decline and Fall of the British Empire: a Brief Account of those Causes which Resulted in the Destruction of our late Ally, together with a Comparison between the British and Roman Empires,' a satirical skit which has now reached a third thousand.

From Mr. John Murray we have received another volume of the popular edition of the works of Dr. Samuel Smiles. This is the Life of Robert Dick, Baker, of Thurso, of whom the Director-General of the Geographical Society remarked, 'this baker knew ten times more of botanical science than I did.' Dick was one of the most notable examples of Self Help that Dr. Smiles has recorded. Well printed and illustrated, this re-issue is very welcome.

A further instalment of the 'Selected Works of Mdlle. Riego de la Branchardière' has been sent to us by Mr. Horace Cox. This fourth volume comprises most comprehensive and practical directions on crochet, knitting, lace work, &c., edited and revised by Mrs. Rivers Turnbull.

PUBLICATIONS OF THE WEEK.

WITH AN INDEX OF AUTHORS, TITLES, AND SUBJECTS OF BOOKS IN ONE ALPHABET.

All books are in cloth when not otherwise described. When the word 'net' is printed against the price of a book it means that there is not the usual trade allowance. The words of the Index which are printed in italics refer to the name under which the title of a work appears in larger type. Publishers who observe the omission of a book from the list will confer a favour by sending a copy of the title to the office for insertion in the next number.
